Farmers urge £700 million cull of old cattle to win back public confidence in safey of beef

Cabinet may accept call for slaughter

THE Government was last night seriously considering the destruction of thousands of cattle as the only way to restore confidence in the beef industry as European veterinary officials upheld their plans for a world ban.

For the first time, the Prime Minister accepted that he might have to go beyond the advice of its scientific experts and embrace the National Farmers' Union scheme for the destruction of older cows.

That would involve the incineration of more than $00,000 animals a year, mainly from dairy herds, and cost up to £700 million in compensation. Some 16,000 a week would be culled as they reached the end of their working life and their carcasses destroyed rather than used for food Existing incineration fa-lities would be unable to handle such a volume, however, and new plant would have to be built.

The NFU put forward its plan - which has the support of the Country Landowners Association and leaders of the food industry - as farmers appeared to accept that there was no chance of controlling the catastrophe by reassuring consumers. But Tory MPs were privately critical yesterday, saying that one day the Government was proposing a cull, the next suggesting it would do nothing more, and then apparently reviving the slaughter option. John Major said that the proposal would be carefully examined, but he blamed Labour for famning public hysteria and made plain that if the cattle were killed it would be because the Government had been forced to accept that confidence could not be restored by the "sensible practical" measures that had been

Secretary, was also given a rough ride over the Government's approach yesterday when mothers called a BBC Radio phone-in to accuse him of "appalling" complacency and a "frightening lack of concern" for public safety.

The selective slaughter scheme put to Mr Major, Mr Blair and Mr Ashdown by the NFU president David Naish yesterday is the option that would be the least disruptive to farmers while still being radical enough to stand a chance of impressing consumers and opinion abroad. It is estimated that up to 16,000 cows are slaughtered for food every week, most of them dairy cows up to seven years old. The carcasses are mainly used to make cheaper meat products and have also been a big element in the export trade with France.

Older dairy cows are the most likely to have eaten the scrapie-infected feed that is thought to have caused "mad cow" disease before it was

Sir David said: "The events

Ian Gardiner, the NFU's director of policy, said: "We would be looking for compensation of around £800 an animal. We recognise that there would be real problems animals. We have no market at all for that beef now because it is not on the menu anywhere and not in shops."

Ewen Cameron, the dairy farming president of the CLA, said: "I really do believe this would help to put the beef industry back on its feet because we would be removing any risk of BSE getting into the food chain. Most beef animals are slaughtered at no more than two years and no animal that young has ever developed BSE."

If the Government goes for the scheme, it will have to decide the minimum age of cows to be taken out of the food chain, whether to distinguish between BSE-free herds and others, and whether there might be a limited .all-herd slaughter policy for the most affected herds.

There would also probably be an argument over the level of compensation. The NFU's figure of £800 per animal is about £300 more than the average market price for old cows before the crisis broke

The need for action has become more urgent as the European Commission is almost certain to impose a world ban on British beef exports today. The Commission's veterinary committee yesterday rebuffed British efforts to avert the move, which officials described as a pointless exercise undertaken at Mr Major's insistence. One French official said: Why doesn't this fellow deal with the problem he's got instead of trying to unload the blame on Europe. Others said that that Sir Kenneth Calman, the Chief Medical Officer, and Keith Meldrum, the Chief Veterinary Officer, had had nothing new to say.

The ban will be formally announced after a vote among commissioners. The result is a foregone conclusion as only Sir Leon Brittan and possibly Neil Kinnock are likely to oppose the embargo.

ITALIAN complacency over mad cow disease turned to alarm yesterday as another case of Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease surfaced and there were fears that the Mafia may have sold infected beef.

Police impounded British beef in Sardinia and Turin. and gave a warning that smugglers with possible Mafia links were trading British beef under "false health certificates" from Ireland.

Italy was one of the last EU countries to ban British beef last week. The press and media have bombarded Italians with reassuring statements from the authorities and experts, with the Ministry of Health stating repeatedly that there was "no cause for alarm". The Ministry of Agriculture said that only "negligi-ble quantities" of beef were imported from Britain, and

CHRISTOPHER HOWES. a British charity worker kid-napped at gunpoint in northwest Cambodia, is believed to have been seized by a breakaway Khmer Rouge faction. Mr Howes, 36, was taken hostage with up to 27 other volunteers as he supervised mine clearing near Siem Reap. By last night he and his Cambodian interpreter were the only two who had not escaped or been released.

The kidnappers drove their captives north into Varin district, towards Khmer Rouge strongholds along the Thai border. Radio messages inter-cepted by the United Nations World Food Programme suggested that a ransom of £260 was being demanded for each of the Cambodian hostages then still held. As Mr Howe's family awaited news at their home in Bristol last night, they were aware that all the Britons kidnapped by the Khmer

The board said project work had been developed to test skills that could not be demonstrated in a traditional examination. "Each candidate has to produce a solution to the investigation under supervised conditions without the use of any notes, so candidates who have not properly under stood the work involved would be unable to produce a satisfactory answer."

Countryside ramblings bring out the unseen beast in Tony Blair

A ert Wareing (Lab, Liverpool W Derby) to interest the nation in lingering deaths through asbestosis failed at Prime Minister's Questions yesterday. Poor lamb: does he not understand? Until further notice, death by mad cow disease is the only permissible topic of parliamentary discourse. All other deaths are of no account, all other diseases trivial. Gun laws? That was last week. Is China at war with Taiwan yet? Sorry, our attention slipped.

It is just possible that if the Second Coming were to occur today, or Armageddon tomorrow, an MP might out down a Written Question. It is conceivable that if a meteor the size of Belgium were reported to be in imminent danger of slamming into the heart of London, some misguided backbencher might suppose this interesting enough to raise with the PM. Otherwise, MPs who know where their party advantage lies are best employed polishing sound bites on encephal-

Foremost among these is Tony Blair. With Her Majesty's Opposition roaring in support behind him, the Labour leader scored a decisive victory in politics if not in logic yesterday by demanding that John Major quantify the un-quantifiable Major's failure to do so, quivered Blair in his churchiest stage tenor, amounted to "mind-boggling incompetence".

'Hear, hear!" shouted the Opposition. MPs seem to think that if they shout "What is the risk? What is the risk?"

loud enough, or demand "Is it safe? Yes or no?" with sufficient urgency, then the fact that nobody knows the answer to these questions will just dissolve in the face of their

Mr Major looked stumped for a means of resisting it. People often complain that MPs refuse to give a straight answer, but it would have been a brave and foolish PM who tendered an honest "I don't know" to the House of Commons yesterday.

So instead, Major tried to turn the tables on Blair and paint the Labour Party as the villains of the piece. If our beef industry were needlessly destroyed, he said, and panic triggered, we would know who to blame.

But the Prime Minister is whistling in the dark, and an undertone of exasperation in his voice yesterday suggested he knew it. The government benches, who support him to a man and woman over this, looked baffled and angry at their inability to get their counsel of hesitation across in the Chamber or to the nation. Added to their practical concern about public alarm, it has come as something of a shock to the Parliamentary how unscrupulous an instinct for the jugular Tony Blair possesses. Up until now it has been fashionable among them to represent him as out of his depth: possibly even wellmeaning but lightweight, a fresh-faced assemblage of vacuities posing as a leader, cruising for a bruising when the country finds him out. Now they see his ruthless-ness. The skill and speed with which he has exploited this crisis, the sang-froid with which (as they see it) he can ter of four million cartle for the achievement of a few extra points in the opinion polls, dismays them.

Mr Blair represents Sedgefield. Sheep graze there. Sheep are susceptible to scrapie. Blair has been photographed in a Barbour jacket patting cows elsewhere in Britain. It is just possible that a link can be established between Mr Blair personally and the outbreak of mad cow disease. Short of this (the Tories fear) all is lost.

Whitehall tries to stop publication of Scott documents

By NIGEL WILLIAMSON, WHITEHALL CORRESPONDENT

SIR RICHARD SCOTT is involved in a dispute with Whitehall over plans to publish thousands of confidential government documents which he examined in the course of his inquiry into arms-to-Irag. More than 12,000 official documents, referred to in the Scott report, are due to be published in full in May, probably on CD-Rom. Several senior civil servants are unhappy at confidential advice to ministers from named officials being made public. Scott officials are at present in discussion with Whitehall departments over what should be published and how much should be excised. The negotiations are very civilised but there are differences of opinion," a Whitehall source said. Last week Sir Richard said in a lecture that he saw no evidence that Whitehall was about to change its traditional culture of secrecy in the wake of his report. He also attacked the Government's argument that advice from officials to ministers had to remain confi-

However, material provided by the intelligence services to the inquiry will not be published. Sir Richard's favoured form of publication is CD-Rom, although this still requires the permission of Parliament. The documents will be presented to the House of Commons, as was the Scott report, but MPs will need to agree to accept them in electronic, rather than a more traditional, format.

The five volumes of the Scott report quote from many of the papers to be published and the release of the full documents is unlikely to unearth fresh areas of controversy. RUC 'should drop pledge to Queen'

The RUC should drop its oath of allegiance to the Queen and implement a series of modest reforms to make the force more acceptable to Roman Catholics, the Northern Ireland Police Authority said yesterday. In a report on the future of policing. the authority said the measures were necessary to tackle the huge imbalance between Protestants and Roman Catholics in the RUC. Catholics account for just 8 per cent of the force.

The report recommends that the 200-word oath, which dates back to 1868, should be replaced with a short oath sworn by police officers in Scotland which makes no mention of the Queen. The practice of flying the Union flag over police stations should be examined and the suffix "Northern Ireland's Police Service" should be added to the name of the

Tory revolt on divorce

Rebel Tory MPs are plotting a fresh revolt over the proposed reform of divorce law in the Commons next week. They plan to move amendments to bring back the concept of fault and reintroduce existing time limits. So-called "quickie" divorces would be stopped and no marriage would be ended in less than a year. Separated couples could divorce after two years by consent and after five years without consent.

Asbestos company challenges judgment By A STAFF REPORTER

ONE of Britain's biggest engineering companies claimed in the Court of Appeal yesterday that it was not liable to pay compensation to people who developed cancer from breath-

T&N is trying to overturn a High Court judge's decision in October last year that the firm must pay damages to two people who as children played in the drifts of white dust which blanketed the made around their homes. It was the first time that a court had awarded compensation for asbestos claims made by anyone other than those working in a plant. William Woodward, QC, for T&N, said one of the victims, Arthur Margereson, who died from mesothelioma, had played around the factory. JW Roberts in Armley, Leeds, for eight years before the dangers were realised and factory owners became liable to protect people from the risks.

Mr Woodward said that in the Leeds judgment, Mr Jus-tice Holland had failed to define where the area of risk lay outside the factory walls. Evelyn Margereson, 70, was awarded £50,000 for the death

five years ago of her husband. June Hancock, 60, who was awarded £65,000, is also suffering from the same cancer of the chest lining, was in court yesterday to hear the company's attempt to overturn the ruling, which became a test case for up to 40 other cases in the Armley area and possibly 500 nationally.

She began her action soon after her mother died from the same illness and has been warned by doctors she has only months to live.

T&N, which was called Turner and Newall until 1987, has already paid £250 million worldwide to people directly affected by asbestosis and other related diseases. Mrs Hancock played among the dust that drifted from JW Roberts, a factory making insulating mattresses for boilers, in the late 1930s and 1940s. The hearing continues.

Killer 'knifed and shot Britons in Australian forest'

A CAVALRY sword, probably used to decapitate one of his victims, was among a mass of evidence linking an Austra-lian roadworker to the murders of seven tourists, a court in Sydney was told yesterday.

On the second day of the "hackpacker trial" of 51-yearold Ivan Milat for the murders of two Britons, three Germans and an Australian couple, a iury was told that they were "killings for killing's sake". Earlier the prosecution raised the possibility that more than one person might have been involved in the attacks.

The young victims were killed in a forest outside Sydney, using rifles and a large knife, Mark Tedeschi, QC. for the prosecution, said. He said a leather leash and other restraints were found near by and with some of the bodies, buried in makeshift graves in the forest.

As Mr Milat took notes, Mr Tedeschi added: "The seven backpackers were killed in ferocious and sustained attacks in which vastly more force was used than necessary to kill." Six of the backpackers were taken in pairs. Mr Tedeschi said the remains of two German tourists were found near what appeared to have been a "shooting gallery" in the forest where restraints and spent ammunition littered the ground. them, Anja Habschied, had been decapitated, possibly with the cavalry sword found in the home of Mr Milat's mother, Mr Tedeschi said. Habschied's head, apparently severed from behind, was never found.

The Crown does not know how many persons there were in the forest at the time of the alleged murders," he said, adding that the evidence linked Mr Milat with all seven backpackers. Mr Milat has denied murdering Joanne Walters, 22, from Maesteg, Mid Glamorgan, and Caro-line Clarke, 21, from Surrey; Germans Miss Habschied, 20. Gabor Neugebauer, 21, and Simone Schmidl, 21; and Australians James Gibson and Deborah Everist, both 19, between September 1989 and November 1992.

Their bodies were unearthed from shallow bush graves in the Belanglo State Forest, near Sydney. Postmortem examinations showed all were killed using a gun or knife, Mr Tedeschi said. The evidence also suggested sexual interference, he said, citing slashed clothing, and underwear and jeans which had been removed. Mr Milat was arrested in May 1994 at

A rifle bolt found hidden in a wall cavity in the house was used at the scene of Miss Clarke's murder and near where the bodies of the Germans were dumped, he said. Blood-stained sash cord was also found in the garage and genutically tested against blood samples provided by Miss Clarke's parents.

Mr Tedeschi listed for more than an hour camping and personal equipment owned by the victims and found by police among the defendant's belongings. It included a photograph of his girlfriend. Challinder Hughes, wearing a green and white Benetton top which matched one worn by Miss Clarke.

Mr Tedeschi said that such had been the ferocity of the stabbing attack on Miss Walters that the knife cut several of her vertebrae and her spinal cord, which would have left her paralysed. A piece of fabric used to gag her was still tied around her head and her underwear was missing. Miss Clarke had ten bullet wounds to the head and stab wounds to the back and chest.

Mr Milat has also denied attempting to abduct Paul Onions, a British tourist, who allegedly escaped from him after he gave him a lift in 1990 by throwing himself in front of an oncoming vehicle to summon help. The case continues.

New-look Duchess presents bold face

By Emma Wilkins

THE Duchess of York has posed for a series of glamorous photographs which claim to show that she has adopted a new look to accompany a new lifestyle.

The photographs, published by Hello!, were taken during a seven-hour fashion shoot at a Paris hotel in January. The deal with the magazine was arranged by the Duchess's friend, Princess Marie Esmeralda of Belgium, who is co-owner of a photographic agency called Press

According to the magazine text, the Duchess has created a new look which combines "appealing fragility" with "obvious determination". A spokeswoman for the Duchess declined to say whether she had been paid for the photographs or would be donating any of the money to

Earlier this year Buckingham Palace made it clear that the Queen was no longer prepared to offer financial support to her daughter-in-law, who had a bank overdraft of at least £1 million.

"The deal was put together by Princess Esmeralda," the Duchess's spokeswoman said. "It is still being discussed where the money is going. The Duchess has always given generously to charity in the workouts five days a week with her personal trainer, which prepared her for a gruelling desert horse race in Qatar last week. "The Duchess is now incredibly fit. She has lost a considerable amount of weight. We think the photographs look stunning," the spokeswoman said.

The fashion photographer Andre Rau took the shots of the Duchess, who is shown in black trouser suits by Yves Saint Laurent. Mr Rau told the magazine: "She's really incredible. I hardly needed to tell her what to do.

"At first I thought she might be a bit aloof because of her title, but she wasn't like that at all. In no time at all, we were all calling her Sarah.

In addition, concerns had been raised about a security camera "blind spot" where a blow torch was used to cut a hole in the inner security fence. John Geeson, the prison's security governor, also said he suspected a mainte-nance man who had been in charge of the prisoners had helped them to get away.

Mr Geeson was giving evidence on the first day of the trial of Anthony Coughtrey. 23, and Gary Johns, 30. They deny false imprisonment but admit escaping last July.

life, and a third murderer had been detailed by Michael Goldsmith, the maintenance man, to paint a workshop wall. Nicola Merrick, for the prosecution, said the two men overpowered Mr Goldsmith, tied him to an armchair and placed a pillowcase over his head. The third prisoner was tied up after he made it clear he wanted nothing to do with the escape. The trial continues.

Colleague guilty of assault for harassing woman

By Richard Ford, home correspondent

A MAN who harassed a treated by her doctor for lemale collegue with letters and telephone calls for two years was found guilty of assault yesterday. Gaetano Constanza was convicted in spite of never attacking the woman with whom he had become infatuated after speaking on the telephone. It is the second successful conviction of a stalker under existing criminal law within a month. Stalking is not an offence at present, but both the Government and the Labour Party are considering making it a specific crime. Yesterday Louise Wilson, 23, was in the public gallery at Luton Crown Court as Judge Moss told Constanza that his offence was "exceedingly serious". Constanza was remanded in custody while psychiatric reports are prepared and warned that he faced a "lengthy custodial sentence". Miss Wilson, of Round Green in Luton, said afterwards: "I am determined to get my life back to normal. I don't want to be a victim any longer, and now this case is over I can start to get my confidence back to do the things I used to enjoy".

Constanza, 31, from Luton, pleaded not guilty to assault occasioning actual bodily harm between 1993 and last year. The prosecution claimed his behaviour amounted to an assault by causing Miss Wilson to become ill. She was

Newbury bypass could be further delayed while conservation experts decide what to do with Desmoulin's Whorl, a snail no bigger than a breadcrumb.

Lawyers acting for Sir George Young, the Transport Secretary, gave an undertaking in the High Court yesterday that they would consult English Nature about the endangered snail before moving in to clear the Rickety Bridge campsite. Demonstrators said that the snail study could delay work by weeks, al-though this was denied by Alan Odey, the Highways

Demonstrators opposing the nine-mile, £100 million bypass had hoped that the Government would be forced to designate the site as a special area of conservation. Mr Justice Sedley said that partment of Transport meant that it would discuss with English Nature the method and eviction and clearance of the site. The consultation would have the intention of ensuring that the snail population was not disturbed.

The judge dismissed the appeal by demonstrators that they had a right to be on the land to defend the snail because of the Government's failure to pass conservation

MoD to buy ro-ro ferries for rapid deployment force

TWO roll-on, roll-off ferries are to The 300-man tri-service centre, to be he bought for the Armed Forces as part of a £150 million package to boost rapid deployment capability. Michael Purtillo announced yesterday that the ferries, with more light artillery guns and advanced communications, will be available for the new joint rapid deployment force, which will be operational in

Next week the Defence Secretary will open a permanent joint forces headquarters at Northwood, northwest London, which will be responsible for planning and running deployments of British forces in nflicts or peacekeeping missions.

commanded by Lieutenant-General Christopher Wallace, will be responsible for dispatching the rapid deployment force, a brigade-sized unit of about 5,000 soldiers, based on 3 Commando Brigade and 5 Airborne Brigade. The force will be supported by RAF aircraft and helicopters, Army attack helicopters, specialist am-phibious shipping and other units selected for specific missions. An armoured battalion group and a mechanised infantry group will also be selected for possible deployment with the new force.

The SAS is to be given a new home at a disused RAF base after the planned closure of its headquarters in the suburbs of Hereford. The regiment has been hunting for premises for some time because Stirling Lines, its base for about 40 years, has limited space for training. Yesterday it was confirmed that the elife regiment would move to Credenhill, a disused RAF base a few miles away.

for moving men and equipment rapidly to trouble spots without having to charter available merchant vessels. A senior defence source said: "What we need is assured availability. If you are to move something like mechanised infantry quickly, it is critically important to have a fundamental element of your sealift on tap."
As part of the drive for flexibility and joint forces operations, the RAF is planning to link up with the Royal Navy in a new strategy that will see air force ground-attack Harriers deployed side-by-side with Sea Harriers on board aircraft carriers. In training trials this month, two Harrier GR7s from RAF Wittering in Cambridgeshire have been flying from the carrier HMS Illustrious in year when RAF Harriers will carry out nighttime flights from either Illustrious or HMS Invincible.

Captain Jonathan Band, com-mander of HMS Illustrious, told the Navy's newspaper, Navy News:
The combination of the two aircraft employed from the sea in a power projection role is something that we need. It would give us the option of putting, say, six GR7s on board with six to eight Sea Harriers which would give us a much greater weight of attack or presence."

Under the new strategy which has yet to be formally approved, the RAF Harriers would stay with their their new designated role each year. Navy sources said this month's trials were aimed at ensuring that the new Harrier GR7, which has bigger wings than its predecessor, the GR5, would be capable of sharing the flight deck with the Navy's Sea Harriers. During the trials, the two different types of Harrier conducted joint bombing exercises on ranges ashore and flew against jets from the American aircraft carrier. USS George Washington.

As part of the new flexible policy between the Services, Army Lynx helicopters have also been operating from warships off Portland in training exercises.

Army may let women join battle tank crews

By MICHAEL EVANS DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

WOMEN may serve in future battlefield tank crews after an all-party Commons committee approved expanding their role in the Army.

Women already fly fighter jets and helicopters and "could be engaged in offensive ac-tion", the MPs on the Defence Committee said in a report on manning and recuitment. At present only 47 per cent of all posts in the Army were open to women, the report said. Army chiefs were reviewing their possible role in combat units and decisions were due this summer.

Research was also being carried out by the defence evaluation and research agency to develop a series of physical fitness standards and tests as part of an overall study of women's role.

The committee said it welcomed the reviews and the prospect of wider opportunities for women in the Army. Deployment of women in tanks and infantry in the direct contact battle will be seen by some as a major step. For others it is a natural progression," the report said.

The MPs said that for some years women in all three services had been working in positions of danger "where they can be involved in combat, whether in support of the frontline, at sea in warships or at RAF bases". They recommended that before any decision was made by ministers to deploy women in armoured regiments and infantry, "the legal and social issues involved should be debated in the House". The report also found that one reason for the manpower shortage in the Army was the relatively high number of new soldiers who failed to complete their training. The drop-out rate among women was significantly higher than among men. Lack of fitness was

Blunder silences Queen's tribute to Polish Jews

FROM ALAN HAMILTON IN WARSAW

A COMPUTER error prevented the Queen paying tribute yesterday to the wartime bravery of Polish Jews.

A packed special session of f the Polish parliament listened appreciatively as the Queen described the courage of Polish forces during the Second World War. According to the text distributed in advance she should then have said: "Nor can we ever forget the suffering of the Polish people under Nazi occupation, nor the terrible fate of Polish Jews."

But she went straight on to her next paragraph, recalling that postwar liberty for Poland had been delayed by the Communist era.

The blunder was particularly unfortunate because the Queen was criticised by some British Jews last week for not including a visit to Auschwitz in her historic state visit to Poland. A visit to a Holocaust memorial in central Warsaw was hurriedly added to her

A Palace spokesman said last night: The omission of one sentence in the speech was absolutely unintentional. The computer printing out the Queen's copy left it off the bottom of the page. It is ewarely our fault, and we very much regret it." In the remainder of her Poland's ambition to join Western institutions, including the European Union and Nato. In a clear message to Russia, which has voiced objections to the eastward expansion of Western European defence, she said: "We strongly support the enlargement of the European Union and Nato, we are in sympathy with your aim to join these bodies, and we are determined that that aim cannot be subject to a veto by any other country. Poland needs Europe, but Europe also needs Poland."

Later the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh entertained Lech Walesa to tea in the Belvedere Palace where they are staying. Poland's former President was their guest at Buckingham Palace and Windsor in 1991. Mr Walesa was on the guest list for the Queen's official lunch for Polish dignitaries in Warsaw's Bristol Hotel yesterday, but he declined because President Kwasniewski, who defeated him in elections last November, was attending. After the 25-minute private meeting. Mr Walesa said: The Queen and I are like old friends; we go back a long time. She is still the mother of her nation; in democracy in Poland we have destroyed so many institutions that we

Walesa, however, appears to harbour no ambition to be Poland's first king for 201 years; he plans to return to work in the Gdansk shipyards.

Five Polish generals were also missing from the lunch despite having invitations. When they arrived they found there were no seats for them. Instead, they were likely to be invited to last night's gala ballet performance in the Oueen's honour at the National Theatre Warsaw.

During the second day of her state visit the Queen was presented with a lump of old aluminium, said to be part of the fuselage of an RAF Liberator bomber that crashed during the Warsaw uprising in August 1944. "That's very historic," the Queen said, glancing hurriedly at an aide to take charge of it.

It was presented when she laid a wreath at a memorial in a Warsaw park marking the spot where the bomber went down. Only one crew member, Henry Lloyd Lyne, survived the crash and he had travelled from his Cornish home for the ceremony yesterday. Mr Lyne, 73, was touched but not overly impressed by the gift to the Queen. "Every time I come here, somebody gives me a bit of aeroplane. They say it is mine. I have a need a point of reference." Mr garage full of bits at home."

Teenagers iailed for fatal attack

TWO muggers were jailed for two years at the Old Bailey yesterday after they admitted robbing a newspaper seller who was celebrating the fifti-eth anniversary of VE-Day. Thomas Kidd, from Brixton, south London, who was in his 60s, died four days later from a ruptured liver and abdominal bleeding. He initially de-clined medical help.

Charges of manslaughter were dropped on the direction of the judge, the Recorder of London, Sir Lawrence Verney. The two youths, now aged 17, cannot be named because of their age at the time of the attack. They robbed Mr Kidd of his £75 takings.

The Rev Clifford Bowman,

38, a married rector in Worksop, questioned more than 60 vicars and rectors on occupational stress for a paper he is writing as part of his studies for an MA at Nottingham University. He was invited by the Bishop of Southwell, the Right Rev Patrick Harris, to present his findings to all the clergy in the

Mr Bowman, who had asked 300 questions about his subjects' physical health, the burden of paperwork and administration, family life, ability to delegate, their perfectionism and the training they had received, found that vicars were given an academic training unsuited to the practical demands of parish

Few had the management skilis as well as the pastoral and theological ones needed for the job. Fifty-nine per cent said they had no social life. While attempting to be a good husband, they often assumed their wife would "under-stand" when they had to spend time with their parishioners instead.

Mr Bowman said: "Clergy tend to have strong assumptions of what a good husband should be like. The turbulence begins when a priest feels that the demands and expectations placed on him by his work are making it increasingly hard for him to live according to his assumptions of what he or she should be like as a good husband and father, or wife and mother. These expectations are increasingly in conflict."

He said that in some cases vicars' wives had amended the questionnaire. Where the vicars had said their jobs did not cause stress, the wives had scribbled: "Oh yes it does."

Howard hails success of strategy but insists ministers are far from complacent Fall in crime marred by rising violence

VIOLENT crime and robberies increased last year in spite of an overall drop in recorded offences in England and Wales for the third consecutive year. The 24 per cent fell to year. The 2.4 per cent fall to 5.123.600 recorded offences during 1995 was also blighted by a rise in crime during the second half of the year.

Michael Howard, the Home Secretary, praised the downturn, pointing out that it was only the third time this century that there had been three consecutive falls. The others were 1912-15 and 1951-54.

He was unable, however, to explain why there were 42,776 more recorded crimes in the second half of 1995 compared with the first six months. "I cannot guarantee that every set of crime figures that are produced will follow the downward trend," he said.

We continue to be deter-mined to fight crime and we are sending a message to the criminal that there is no hiding place. Our strategy is having an impact but we are far from complacent.

Police welcomed the decrease in 1995 but said that the rise in violent crime was a matter of concern because it was an area less susceptible to prevention initiatives. Violent crime rose 2 per cent from 310,900 to 316,300 and the number of robberies, mostly street muggings, rose 14 per cent to 68,400.

Sir Trefor Morris. Chief Constabulary, suggested that one reason for the increase in robbery might that police operations against mugging had encour-aged more people to report incidents.

Fred Broughton, chairman of the Police Federation, said: "We should be very concerned by the increase in reported robberies. Although violent crime is still only 6 per cent of all known crime, the underlying trend is upwards."
The clear-up rate for offences has not improved. A culprit was found for only 26 per cent of crimes, the same as in 1994. Interviews with criminals already in jail accounted for 20 per cent of the offences cleared up.

Mr Howard will unveil the next phase of his drive to curb

The Home Secretary said the statistics were sending a message to criminals crime when he announces proposals for tougher sen-tences tomorrow. He is eager to ensure that the rise in the second half of last year is contained. There were falls of I per cent in 1993 and 5 per cent in 1994, giving a total fall of 468,000 crimes during the past three years. In spite of this, however, there has been an annual average increase of 3.6 per cent in recorded crime during the past decade. During 1995 there was a 15 per cent increase in drug trafficking, to 21,300 offences, a 24.7 per cent rise in perverting the course of justice, to 4.413 and a 16 per cent increase in kidnapping, to 1,250.

Violence against the person fell I per cent from 219,200 to 217,500, in contrast with the overall rise in violent offences. It is the first time since 1949 that offences of violence against the person has fallen in a calendar year. Within this category, the number of homicides - including murder, manslaughter and infanticide rose 3 per cent to 746. Threats or conspiracy to murder rose 3.8 per cent to 7,061. Recorded child abductions increased 24 per cent from 337 Sexual offences fell 5 per cent to 30,400, the first drop since 1990. Gloucestershire police recorded the largest year-on-year fall in this category, of 30 per cent, but its 1994 figure was increased by the Frederick and Rosemary

West case. The number of reports of female rape remained stable at about 5,000 and there were 152 reports of male rape, which was made a specific offence in the 1994 Criminal Justice and Public Order Act. Buggery and indecent assault of men and women fell, as did the number of reported offences of unlawful sexual intercourse with girls under the ages of 13 and 16.

Property offences fell 3 per cent to 4.8 million. Burglary from homes fell from 679,600 to 646,700 though burglary from other premises rose 3.3 per cent to 597,029. Home Office staff suggested that the Office staff suggested that the increase was linked to changes in how the offence was classified. All forces now record burglary from a garage or shed that is not attached to a house as non-domestic.

Vehicle offences dropped per cent from 1,376,400 to 1,323,500: thefts from a vehicles fell from 842,000 to 814,000 and theft of cars or unauthorised taking away dropped almost 5 per cent to 502,925.

The Home Office's annual statistics carry a warning, which points out that a large proportion of crime is unrecorded as many offences are not reported to the police. The British Crime Survey, which is based on interviews with a representative sample of 10,000 people, consistently shows a much higher rate of crime than the police statistics.

A 17 per cent rise in muggings was announced yesterday by the Metropolitan Police, whose figures were included in the Home Office statistics. Household Survey

Elderly disprove predictions of a feeble old age

By Ian Murray and Dominic Kennedy

BRITONS are not only living longer but are staying healthier in old age, according to an authoritative survey on the health of the elderly. Although the population is growing older, there is no increase in the proportion of feeble, infirm or dependent people.

The finding suggests that the 21st century, far from being a nightmare of weak old people becoming a burden on the shrinking proportion of young people, could be a golden age of active, sprightly pensioners.

The figures surprised re-Population Censuses and Surveys, who yesterday published the General Household Survey 1994. Bob Barnes, head of the social survey, said: "Despite the ageing population, the proportion who cannot get out and look after themselves hasn't changed Potentially that has quite a large significance for the next century if that were to be the beginning of a trend. If the proportion of dependent dis-abled unable to look after themselves doesn't increase, it is not such a gloomy outlook as some are predicting."

In the past 25 years, the number of people aged over 75 has increased from 4 per cent to 6 per cent of the population. The proportion of these pensioners aged over 85 has increased from 6 per cent to 9 per cent since 1980, an in-past year compared with less than 25 per cent who said it had not been good. This is a slight improvement on the 1980 figures, but the fact that there are now many more in the older age group means that overall the health of the elderly is improving.

The need for health and social services support has nevertheless grown because the proportion of elderly people living with their child-ren or close relatives has dropped from 21 per cent to 15 per cent since 1980.

Elderly people said they were able to do less than usual on 54 days a year because of illness, but overall only 13 per cent said they were unable to manage going out and walking down the road unaided.

The researchers were concerned about the 39 per cent who lived on their own but were unable to perform simple self-care tasks. Of these, 9 per cent needed help to bathe and 31 per cent could not cut their own toenails. Among those aged over 80 the proportion

"This group will require intensive support from an outside source, either relatives or friends or NHS or personal social services, if they are to remain living in the community," the report says.

Those living alone are buying more modern gadgets, although they are more likely to have a microwave oven than a video recorder or CD

IT'S UNIVERSALLY RECOGNISED

Registration to ISO 9000 says as much about your company as your annual report. In some cases it says even more, because as the only universally recognised quality standard, it is something which is awarded objectively, by

There is a further advantage if these auditors are from BSI, the organisation that "wrote the book" when they published BS5750 back in 1979.

(but it's not a management consultant).

ISO 9000 almost always gives an immediate result in terms of productivity and efficiency, and that means cost reductions.

Your customers benefit because your product or service should perform more consistently.

You can have an immediate dialogue with other registered organisations, giving you a guarantee that you're working with the best. Staff morale is better because they understand what is expected of them and each other.

IT GIVES YOU A COMPETITIVE EDGE

(but it's not a new price policy).

If you're chasing a contract and you're up against a company that's not registered to ISO 9000 you have a distinct, measurable advantage. If you're in the same situation against a company which is also registered, but they didn't gain theirs through BSI, you still have the edge.

That's because BSI have been doing it to the highest standard of application and professionalism, longer than any other certification body and to more companies in the UK and worldwide.

IT PAYS FOR ITSELF

In registering to ISO 9000 through BSI, your organisation gets a review of your quality management system at a much lower cost than calling in other types of business advisory services.

The real dividend comes within your first year of implementation. In that time you should see improvements in all aspects of your business which can cover the cost of BSI registration.

Our prices are fixed, but are obviously dependent on the size and nature of your organisation and the size of the audit team we put in.

We'll be more than happy to visit you to review your quality management system or we can send you a detailed information pack.

THE proportion of women who drink more than is sensible has increased by almost a fifth in two years.

The increasing popularity of alcohol and a growing reluctance among smokers to give up cigarettes are putting the Government's Health of the Nation targets jeopardy.

By 2005, ministers want fewer than 7 per cent of than 14 units of alcohol a week (seven pints of beer or 14 glasses of wine). Although the Government raised the sensible drinking level for women to 21 units in December, the Health of the Nation targets remain unchanged.

In 1984, 9 per cent of women drank 14 units a week. By 1992 that had risen to 11 per cent and yesterday's survey shows that by 1994 13 per cent drank more than 14 units. "You can't overlook the increasing access to alcohol over the past 20 years in supermarkets and general stores, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys said. "You also have the increased popularity of drinking among women, perhaps to do with increasing independence and wider social life." Men also seem reluctant to reduce their drinking, with 27 per cent continuing to drink more than 21 units a week.

The Government wants to reduce the figure to 18 per cent by 2005, although it has since raised the sensible drinking level for men to 28 units.

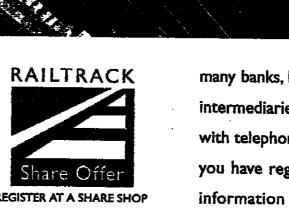

Although smoking is declining, the rate of giving up is much slower than in the 1970s or 1980s. The Government wants fewer than 20 per cent of both sexes to smoke by 2000, but 28 per cent of men and 26 per cent of women are still smoking. Among girls aged between 16 and 19 cigarette smoking rose to 27 per cent in 1994 from 25 per cent in 1992. In 1974, one in three men smoked cigars, but 20 years later the figure was down to 6 per cent.

Thompson scores Oscar double with thanks to Austen

ARTS CORRESPONDENT

BRITISH stars and filmmakers basked in the Oscars limelight yesterday, with Emma Thompson and Nick Park making cinema history.

Thompson scored an unprecedented double by adding an Oscar for the screenplay of Jane Austen's Sense and Sensibility to her acting trophy, the 1991 Academy Award for Best Actress. Nick Park, creator of the Plasticine characters Wallace and Gromit, won the Best Animated Short Film prize for the third time. A CLUTCH of Oscars for two films are expected to boost tourism in northern and southern Britain this year. Scotland will reap the rewards for the success of Braveheart and Hampshire, the "home" county of Jane Austen, for Sense and Sensibility. Braveheart, directed by and CORONATION STREET is to be sponsored by the chocolate firm Cadbury in a £10 million deal. Cadbury's name will appear in the opening and closing credits of the programme and the company will have the right to attach the Coronation Street name to its products in special promotions.

British television's biggest sponsorship deal is timed for the autumn to coincide with the introduction of a fourth weekly episode of Coronation Street. Andrea Wonfor, joint managing director of Granada Television, which makes the programme, said that there would be no gratuitous close-ups of

Cadbury products in the Street's store, the Kabin. Coronation Street, first broadcast in 1960, is regularly watched by 18 million viewers. Despite its obvious attraction to advertisers, it has taken nearly 18 months for Granada to agree a sponsor. Health Secretary appears relaxed as he deals with third food scare of his political career

Dorrell draws on experience to face public anger

STEPHEN DORRELL refused to accept yesterday that he had misjudged the public mood over "mad cow" disease, although he acknowledged that the past week had been one of the toughest of his political career. The Health Secretary, who has endured a punishing round of ministerial meetings, Commons statements and press interviews since the furore began, said the experience was "not dissimilar" to the crisis when Britain was forced out of the exchange-rate mechanism in 1992; as Financial Secretary to the Treasury. Mr Dorreil attempted to defend the pound as he is now defending beef.

Mr Dorrell appeared cool being mauled by angry mothers on the BBC Radio 4 phonein programme Call Nick Ross. Accused of "appalling" complacency and a "frightening lack of concern" for public safety, he was barely able to get a word in to defend

"I flatly refuse to accept that people are incapable of considering the evidence when it is presented to them," Mr Dorrell said. "Of course, I understand that real concerns are raised by this and the first reaction is to ask how bad it is going to be. But once you get through the first reaction, I am absolutely sure that in a modern democracy Government must trust the people, give them the facts and leave them to draw mature

This is the third food scare that Mr Dorrell has encountered in politics. In 1990, he made his first speech as junior Health Minister, on the risks from shellfish, during a Commons debate on the Food

He was first warned of the present crisis over beef two weeks ago by the Govern-ment's Chief Medical Officer, Sir Kenneth Calman. The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (Seac) was meeting to discuss ten cases of an apparently new strain of Creutzieldt-Jakob disease. Although their conclusion, that it was likely to be linked with BSE in cattle, was grim, Mr Dorrell decided from the outset to tie his actions to the scientists'

He said yesterday: "I was rung on Sunday night at home in Worcestershire by my private secretary. He told me the conclusions that the Seac committee had reached. I was obviously very concerned. But I was determined that we would proceed at a deliberate pace and not be seen either to be complacent or to over-

He alerted ministerial colleagues the following day and it was agreed that Seac should be asked to draw up policy recommendations before its findings were made public. The committee met on Tuesday afternoon and deliberated until the early hours of Wednesday morning. Its conclusions were delivered in time for the Cabinet meeting at 10.30am that day which was attended by Professor John Pattison, chairman of Seac. and Dr Calman.

There was a lot of concern and discussion and question-ing both of the scientific findings and the policy recom-mendations. The scientists then left and the Cabinet reached its conclusion that the Seac recommendations should be implemented." The conclusions were presented to Parlia-ment last Wednesday.

Mr Dorrell admitted that he had felt the strain last week in defending the Government's position while the critical advice on what to do about children was still awaited.

"I am quite clear that I had no choice but to make the core finding public last Wednesday while the full scientific recommendations were still incomplete. It has been easier this week because the policy re-sponse is complete. I am clear in my own mind that the advice is unambiguous, namely, that the product is to all intents and purposes safe to

Tory 'incompetence' mocked

TONY BLAIR accused the Government of handling the beef crisis with "quite mindboggling incompetence" yesterday and told the Prime Minister he lacked any sense of responsibility. John Major blamed Mr Blair's front bench for having done all they could to undermine confidence in the agriculture industry and for whipping up

The two clashed at Prime Minister's Questions as Mr Blair tried to force Mr Major to quantify the risk from eating beef. Mr Blair said: "Don't you realise this country expects you as Prime Minter to take responsibility?"

Mr Major replied: "I would have thought you and your colleagues had done enough damage in the last few days THE COMMONS under another name."

that you would now stop trying to create health scares by inviting responses from any minister that can only competently come on the basis of scientific advice."

But after repeated attacks, Mr Major hinted that the Government may be forced to take further action, including the selected slaughter of cattle, if unwarranted scares continued to undermine public confidence in beef. Several Tory MPs with farming constituencies made it clear that Mr Major needed to reassure the public fast that British beef was best. Others blamed the media. Paul Marland, (Gloucestershire W) said the media should despatch investigative teams to Europe "to study what's known in Europe as staggers and manganese deficiency, which is actually BSE

David Ashby (Leicestershire NW) said the issue was not a party political crisis but a crisis for the whole nation. He said, "Can you persuade Mr Blair to stop making cheap party political points, which are doing the farming community so much harm?"

Labour MPs made it clear they thought the public knew exactly who was to blame. Mike Hall (Warrington S) told Mr Major: "Given your disgraceful performance this afternoon, do you remember telling the House that the Government had always and immediately acted upon the expert advice given to it by scientists on BSE? Yet you ignored early recommenda-tions that BSE should be monitored through cattle

Lawyers query justification for Brussels ban on exports

LEGAL CORRESPONDENT

THE European Commission could find itself in the dock of the European Court of Justice if it endorses the proposed ban on beef from Britain.

Lawyers specialising in community law were agreed that the Commission had power in theory to impose a ban, at least in Europe, although some questioned the basis for a worldwide ban. But the sixty four thousand dollar question", as one lawyer put it, is whether any ban is justified on the scientific evidence currently available."

If the Government did take the Commission to the European Court, it would be on the ground that a ban on beef exports was "disproportionate" to the problem it sought to

Alastair Sutton, a barrister with the Brussells law firm Forrester Norall & Sutton said: "In matter of the common agricultural policy and external trade, the European Community does have what is called 'exclusive competence' to make decisions. These are the two classic areas where we have ceded power."

He said that although EU treaties provided for free trade, there was allowance for exception on grounds of protecting human health.

There was a clear consensus among lawyers yesterday that the Government could mount a challenge on whether the scientific evidence was such that public health needed a ban for its protection.

A key principle underpinning community law is that of proportionality, which has been developed over the years in rulings by the European Court. It means that any remedy — in this case the ban must be proportionate to the ill it seeks to address.

Gerald Barling, QC, a leading European expert, said:
"Any challenge to both an EU ban or a worldwide ban would probably brought on LEGAL POSITION grounds of proportionality. rather than the Commission's inherent power to impose a ban." If the Government took the Commission to court and won, the Commission - or whichever EU institution imposed any ban — could be liable for damages.

Peter Freeman, head of EUlaw at Simmons & Simmons, said: "It seems to me that the Commission is pushing the basis of legality quite far. It looks doubtful that they have a very clear black letter power. They seem to be basing any proposed ban on some general competence and the indirect effect on trade. This does raise proportionality: whether such action is too extreme on the basis of the evidence."

Keith Hendry, an EU spe-cialist with Clifford Chance, agreed that the Commission had power to ban imports andexports within the community although a worldwide ban was a "grey area."

"I would start to have doubts. Are they basing such a ban on good evidence? One would ask whether they are concerned not so much with public health as with the market.

Even if a challenge might be possible in principle, other lawyers indicated yesterday that it might be difficult to sustain. Marina Wheeler, a community law barrister, said: "A ban falls fairly and squarely within what is allowed under article 36 on grounds of what is necessary to protect public health. The only way it could be challenged is by saying that any ban, on the advice of the scientific and veterinary committee, is unreasonable on the basis of the evidence put before it.

That committee clearly has decided that human health is at risk, and on that basis I can't see that the Government could succeed in challenging

Free Rivery and State of State

The one lesson you would have thought Government would have learnt over the past few years is that you can't buck the markets. That applies as much as to the consumer market for beef as to the foreign exchange

It is no good believing you are right, as John Major evidently does. In the long run, he may be correct that the risk from eating beef is very small, and that is what the current scientific evidence suggests. But what matters in a panic is the short run — and ministerial appeals for calm will not restore the confidence of beef consumers and producers. Mr Major recognised that yesterday in laying the ground for a government retreat over slaughtering, while seeking to shift the blame to irresopposition comments. Appeals to reason failed over sterling's membership of the exchange-rate mechanism in September 1992 and are likely to fail again over beef. One of the failings of the Major Government is stubbornness and a reluctance to times of market pressure. That was true in the summer of 1992 as the Government stumbled inexorably towards Black Wednesday — as is vividly brought home by Philip Stephens's new book Politics and the Pound and the same trance-like immobility has been repeated over the past week.

An essential political skill is to know how to escape from difficult situations rather than to make them worse. When the new scientific evidence appeared about a possible link between BSE and CJD, ministers should have realised the likely impact.

Their holding statement was bound to produce the reaction it has, albeit inflamed by some panicky stories and shrill reactions from some Labour spokesmen. It is obviously right to rely on scientific advice but that is a necessary, rather than sufficient, condition for judgment. Ministers would have been more sensible to have prepared plans to reassure consumers rather than to allow uncertainty to develop. It is no good saying everything is fine when you have just said your previous assurances have been proved wrong. That has inevitably fuelled fresh doubts. Action of some kind has to be taken to demonstrate that consumers need not worry and to revive the beef market, as Paddy slaughtering, however symbolic, need not be very high. Tory MPs are divded on the issue. Some argue that the fuss is much overdone and that the farming lobby has too much influence, while farming MPs are demanding that something must be done. Of course, the issue is not above politics, that is pious nonsense. The Government deserves to be criticised for its mishandling, though Stephen Dorrell has

Ashdown argued yesterday.

The cost of limited action on of his public appearances. But some of the Labour reaction has been over the top. It is crass to pretend that as well as Tory - would not face the same dilemmas over balancing the scientific evidence with the interests of consumers and producers. There is no simple solution. only a least worst one. Tony Blair's forensic approach and Gavin Strang's experience and knowledge have been preferable to Harriet Harman's partisan exaggerations - which yet again showed the price which Labour is paying for having been in opposition for so long.

B eef will not be on the front pages for ever. These rows normally only stay in the headlines for a week or two at most. People will start eating beef again. The Tories' standing in the polls is likely to suffer in the short-term and the affair may reinforce existing public doubts about its competence. however unfair Mr Major may regard such a reaction. BSE is likely to be remembered as merely a footnote in the history of the Major Government, but in its decline rather than its recovery.

Carcass disposal would be huge task

SCIENCE EDITOR

ANY policy involving the large-scale slaughter of cattle to control BSE would face formidable logistical diffi-

The National Farmers' Union argues that the best policy would be to destroy cows that have reached the end of their productive lives. That would not require any new slaughtering facilities since such animals are already being killed. But instead of being used for food. the carcasses would be destroyed, which could present

In 1967-68, to control an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, 212,000 cows were slaughtered and hurst in the fields, along with 108.000 foot-and-mouth presented no danger to human beings. A similar policy could not be followed for the much larger numbers of cattle involved in the NFU plan. It takes high temperatures to destroy the infective agents, so furnaces would be needed to ensure safety. Otherwise, the infection might escape and reenter the food chain. Similarly, the slaughtered cattle could not be buried for fear of contaminating water courses.

Slaughtering could be the least of the problems, Ian Gardner of the NFU said. We already slaughter about 3.3 million cattle every year, 800,000 cows and 2.5 million younger creatures," he said.

"There is a lot of surplus slaughterhouse capacity so increasing those numbers might not be impossible."

Mr Gardner and others at the NFU argue that suspect cattle are safer alive than dead. "So long as they are alive they can't spread the disease and they don't give it to their progeny" he says. They are perfectly safe."

Industry sources said yes terday that abattoirs could start closing and laying off staff within the next ten days unless beef sales started moving again and the European blockade was lifted.

Britain's 484 abattoirs employ 15,000 people and earn about £3.5 billion a year. A further 100,000 people work in the meat-cutting and processing plants that the abattoirs supply.

The abattoirs' difficulties have been compounded by the decision to ban the use of any abattoir waste in feed for farm animals. As a result, thousands of tonnes of waste material remain uncollected at slaughterhouses.

Food firms try to cut all sources of British beef

BY ANDREW PIERCE AND ROBIN YOUNG

FOOD manufacturers were considering dropping British beef from a wide range of products last night as consumer concern grew over the mixed messages coming from the Government and the European Union.

Customer service departments of shops were bornbarded yesterday by record numbers of telephone calls from customers. Birds Eye Wall's is expected to become the latest company to ban British beef from its prepacked food. Customers telephoning the company helpline were assured that deliveries would be halted by the end of the week.

The Vegetarian Society said it was handling more than 400 telephone inquiries a day. Chris Olivant, the information manager, said: "The difficulty of avoiding beef fats and extracts means that choosing products carrying the suitable for vegetarians' symbols is the only quick way of ensuring you do not eat beef. It saves having to trawl through the fine print. Asda and Tesco have offered a list of foods that do not contain British beef by-products. Tesco will differentiate between its trish and British beef products for the first time. Sainsbury's announced yesterday that it would label all

CPC, the manufacturer of Bovril and Knorr products, is considering using "no British beef" signs on its labels, and British beef may be dropped from Oxo cubes for the first time. Even fish and chips are not immune from the beef threat, as many shops use beef lard for frying. United Biscuits, whose brand names include McVitie's and KP, said it was considering ways to keep British beef out of its foods. The company exports 25 per cent of Nestle said that all its confectionery was imported from Germany and France but a small proportion of chilled desserts contained gelatine. They will be affected. We are very concerned by the European Union move," a spokesman said.

Boots confirmed that beef was contained in a small number of its cosmetics and medicine. But the company declined to name the products or the source of the beef. Beef is also involved in the manufacturing process of Benylin expectorant cough medicine. Max Factor was considering whether to continue the use of beef tallow in its lipstick range.

An emergency board meeting was held yesterday at Seven Seas Health Care, the market leader in vitamin supplement capsules. Alan Clements, the commercial di-rector, said: The gelatine used in all Seven Seas products does not derive from British beef or beef by-products. If the EU ban includes our products, that would be a travesty. The gelatine comes from German beef, is of pharmaceutical grade and much better than that used in

Roger Junes of Croda Colloids, a leading gelatine manufacturer, said yesterday that there was no substitute for gelatine as a gelling agent, emulsifier and stabiliser. Most gelatine used in confectionery is made from pigskin. but is often blended with gelatine from beef bones and hides. EXPERIMENTS

PORK and chicken are unlikely to be affected by the BSE scare, experiments at the Cen-tral Veterinary Laboratory have shown (Nigel Hawkes writes).

While the symptoms of BSE can be induced in pigs by injecting material from infected cows into their brains. feeding them the same material does not cause the disease.

The same experiments have been carried out with chickens, with even more clear-cut results. They could not be infected with BSE either by feeding or injection. Sheep could be more of a potential problem. While serapie has been present in sheep for at least 200 years, there is no evidence that it can cross to man. But sheep fed BSE-contaminated material do develon the disease.

This opens up the possibility that BSÉ-infected sheep could be more of a threat than those with scrapic, but there is no evidence of this happening.

France says mass slaughter may be only option

By Our Foreign Staff

BRITAIN should slaughter its entire cattle herd if questions persist on the danger posed to humans by BSE, the French Agriculture Minister said

"If it is a question of public health, then why not?" Philippe Vasseur told La Tribune newspaper, adding that France was anxious to help solve the crisis and called for European solidarity to aid the British beef industry. He accepted that British farmers would have to be paid compensation. Vasseur's comments were the latest effort by the French Government to convince the public that BSE is almost entirely a British phe-nomenon and that beef produced in France is quite sale. On Monday the French authorities slaughtered a herd of cattle in Brittany after one was found to be infected with BSE.

France has introduced a system to enable consumers to distinguish imported meat from home-produced beef. French meat will carry a red. white and blue label with the initials VF. standing for Viande Française" - a somewhat unhappy choice since the initials VF might also stand for "vache folle" or mad cow.

Seeds of mortality sow fear on island

BY NICK NUTTALL ENVIRONMENT CORRESPONDENT

AN ALIEN tree brought to the Caribbean by Victorian botanists is rampaging through Jamaica's Blue Mountains, threatening scores of rare species and the country's coffee plants.

Scientists from the University of Wales, Bangor, and the West Indies, said yesterday that finding a way of curbing the mock orange was a race against time. The Blue Mountains are home to more than 500 rare plants of which 275 are unique to Jamaica. Dr Devi Prasad, from the University of the West Indies, Kingston, said he feared many of these will be lost if the tree, Pittosporum undulatum, is allowed to spread unchecked.

The tree has such dense crown that it is blotting out sunlight, killing plants which stop soil being washed away dur-ing heavy rainfall. Details of the threat will emerge tomorrow when the scientists get £43,000 under the Darwin Initiative, a British Department of the Environment pro-gramme set up after the Rio Earth Summit in 1992 to conserve wildlife in the developing world.

The mock orange was brought to Jamaica in the 19th century from Australia by Kew Gardens, but spread partly due to local birds adapting to eat the fruit and then spreading

Hong Kong's civil servants told by China to toe line

FROM JONATHAN MIRSKY IN HONG KONG

CHINA has put more pressure on Hong Kong by telling senior civil servants here yesterday that they must demonstrate their support for the Peking-appointed Provisional Legislative Council, which will be established before the 1997 takeover.

This places civil servants in the position of having to support a policy opposed by Hong Kong Government.

Sierra Leone rebels in peace talks

SIERRA LEONE'S rebel leader, Corporal Foday Sankoh, emerged after five years in the shadows yesterday to meet government mediators in the Ivory Coast (Sam Kiley writes).

The talks were aimed at hammering out a peace deal before the country's newly-elected civilian Government takes over this week. Corporal Sankoh left his bush hideout to be flown to the talks by

The first meeting between Corporal Sankoh and Brigadier Julius Maada Bio. the outgoing Sierra Leone head of state, concentrated on what the rebel soldiers in the Revolutionary Democratic Front will do if a peace deal is reached. At least 10,000 people have been killed and 2

Nostalgic Dole pays tribute to values of Kansas heartland

BENEATH vast skies on the great plains of the American heartland lies Russell, Kansas, a speck of 4,800 people that is 1,500 miles from either coast. 250 miles from the nearest metropolis and a throwback to an earlier, more innocent, age for which modern America feels so nostalgic.

Here the air is clean, the climate bracing, the townsfolk all know each other, greet strangers warmly and flock to church on Sunday. Wheat, cattle and a little local oil provide work for all who want and while wages are low $30,000 (£19,000) buys a decent home on a tidy street. Few bother to lock their doors, the only recent offence of note being the draining of the lown's water tower by some prankster. It is the sort of thoroughly wholesome place that every presidential candidate would love to say he came from, and Bob Dole actually does. As he was cementing the Republican nomination in yesterday's California primary, the 72-yearsenator made an emotional return to his birthplace to show America "the real Bob Dole" behind that dour image, to counter the charge that he is a creature of Washington, and to make Russell work for him like Hope, Arkansas, did for President Clinton in 1992.

He was the "heartland" candidate, he told a rally in the high school gym where the whole town gathered to give him a hero's welcome and he twice had to choke back tears. Anyone who wants to understand me must first understand the community of Russell." He said the town had shaped and steeled him. It had taught him discipline, integrity, hard work and self-reliance. Braving an icy prairie wind he laid flowers at his parents' grave, then visited the modest Maple Street bungalow where his family weathered the terrible dust storms of the 1930s and lived for two years in the basement during the Depression so the house

With his two sisters, who still live in Russell, Mr Dole crossed the lines of the once great Union Pacific railway to the grain siles where his father laboured, then headed up Main Street. He passed the shop where his mother gave sewing lessons to help to make ends meet. He greeted Alice Mills, his 96-year-old former mathematics teacher, who complained that he was looking thin. He lingered at the old Dawson's Drugstore where he worked as a schoolboy.

Unions pledge $35m for Clinton war-chest

FROM LAN BRODIE IN WASHINGTON

SWALLOWING their past misgivings, America's biggest federation of trade unions has endorsed President Clinton for re-election and promised to help him with a huge campaign war-chest.

All but two of 78 unions. representing 13 million workers, gave their backing to Mr Clinton during a Washington conference of the American Federation of Labour and Congress of Industrial Organisations. The two exceptions. the Teamsters and San Francisco's Longshoremen, said they wanted more time to consider their decision.

The endorsement was greeted as a declaration of war by Republicans. They were upset that the unions will raise a fund of $35 million (£23 million) by imposing a 15 cent monthly levy on members.

In this way, the Republicans claimed, the 40 per cent of union members who voted Republican in the last presidential election will be forced to contribute to Democratic coffers against their wishes. The Republicans filed complaints with the Federal Election Commission, accusing the union federation of breaking election laws that restrict the unions' use of workers'

The funds will go for radio and television commercials and a mobilisation drive targeted at 75 constituencies where Republican incumbents are considered vulnerable.

The federation endorsed Mr Clinton despite its fury three years ago over his enact-ment of the North American Free Trade Agreement, which the unions say has caused the loss of thousands of American jobs to Mexico. The unions recognise, though, that they have nowhere else to go in an election that pits Mr Clinton against Bob Dole.

British tourists tell of balloon crash in Rocky Mountains

BRITISH tourists in the Rocky Mountains yesterday described how they were nearly killed on a hot air balloon sightseeing trip when the craft struck a moutain ridge and caught fire. One man spoke of panic as the flames licked up around us" and counted himself fortunate to be alive. Nine passengers from Britain were in the basket of the balloon when it was caught by a cross wind and blown onto the ridge. One woman was seriously hurt. The gust caught the balloon as it was preparing to land on an 8,000ft-high plateau surrounded by peaks.

The impact caused the basket to topple over and the gasfuelled heating equipment burst into flames. The basket, too, caught fire as it was being dragged along the snowy ridge out of control. Some of the passengers fell from the basket, others had to scramble for safety, before the flaming remains of the balloon flew high in to air. It was later retrieved 12 miles from the site of the crash.

The accident happened in good weather conditions near Colorado Springs, two hours' drive from the ski resort of minute pleasure flight began and where many of the passengers were on holiday. John One of them.

McCulloch, of Edinburgh, said: "Suddenly the balloon lost height and, despite the efforts of the pilot, we bumped into the hillside.

The heater was knocked over and the basket caught fire. People, including myself, tumbled out as we were dragged along the top of a ridge for about 50 yards. As you can imagine, there was a bit of a panic as the flames licked up around us. Fortunately the basket was on the ground. We didn't gain height

The basket was up-ended when it hit a rock or tree stump. We were being bowled along but were unable to put the brakes on, as it Mr McCulloch said. He added: "By the time I got on my feet everybody had been thrown out. It was all over in a minute or two. A few people had their hair singed and a couple looked to have broken bones."

Margaret Lowday, 43, from London, was taken by helicopter to a hospital in Denver, the nearest big city, and was yesterday said to be in a serious condition. Three other people taken to a local hospital, Joanne Orton, 30, of Aylestone, Leicestershire, Brian Kinghorn, 42, of Greystoke, Cumbria, and · Mr McCulloch, were held overnight and were yesterday resting in their hotel rooms. Mr Kinghorn said: "All I can remember is the burners coming down in a flash of The balloon really caught the ground and turned completely upside down." Mr McCulloch said that the pilot, Rick Lang, cut him free from a tangle of balloon equipment as the craft careered towards the edge of the ridge. "I thought I had jumped out but could not understand why the balloon was trailing me along," said Mr McCulloch. 'It kept lifting me and setting me back down. I couldn't get it off me." Mr Lang, whose company is called Mile High Adventures, was not seriously hurt in the crash. He could not be contacted yesterday.

Mr McCulloch, who said that he would be unlikely to take another balloon ride. discounted any suggestions that the basket was carrying too many people. "It was a large basket and there was plenty of room. The balloon could easily lift our weight. It was just bad luck that we got into a cross wind. Balloon trips are a popular form of activity in and around the ski resorts of Colorado and Utah. Federal Aviation Administration officials are to investigate the crash.

Obstacles to Bosnia peace put election plan in peril

By Michael Binyon, diplomatic editor

THE flight of Serbs from Sarajevo suburbs, the failure so far to release all prisoners of war, and deadlock over the extradition of suspected war criminals have led Western diplomats to give a warning that, unless the ceasefire in Bosnia-Herzegovina is stabilised, the elections planned for this autumn may be postponed or scrapped.

After the Moscow meeting of the Contact Group last weekend, Carl Bildt, the EU representative in Bosnia, has said that all reconstruction aid would stop if remaining prisoners were not released very soon. His warning came as the timetable for a return to democratic politics looks increasingly unrealistic, and talks on the registration and rights of voters are in danger of breaking down. Diplomats at the Moscow meeting emphasised their determination to hold elections for local and national assemblies and leaders in both halves of Bosnia before the September deadline set by the Dayton accords. However, so complex are the details, and so opposed are the Bosnian and Serb leaders to fulfilling conditions that would allow a free vote, that even officials from the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), charged with running the elections, are beginning to doubt whether they can be held.

The main difficulties are: the complexity of the elections, which cover municipal, cantonal and national bodies: the question whether refugees should vote in their home towns or places to which they have fled; the need to guarantee freedom of movement for electoral candidates; and access by different opposition groups to state-controlled media. The OSCE is reluctant to run the polls, but if the 30 election commissions in Bosnia cannot agree on procedure, it may be forced to take over. Whitehall officials said yesterday the obstacles were enormous, but the Western powers were determined that the voting should go ahead, as the entire political settlement depended on them.

The other main problem is the proliferation of parties, with more than 50 in the Bosnian Federation and some 26 in Serbian Bosnia. Most are merely the vehicles for ambitious local personalities, but the OSCE insists on a threshold of 10,000 signatures before any candidate can stand at federation level. It is not easy to get access to television or newspapers for the opposition groups, especially on the Serb side.

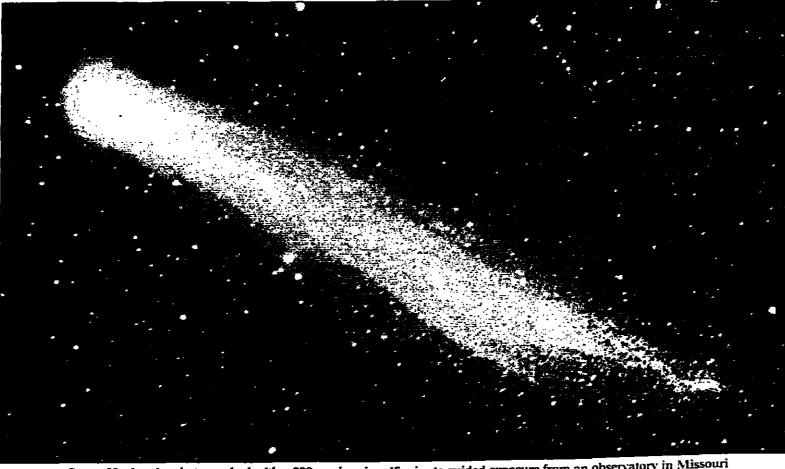

Suspected war criminals are forbidden to stand under the Dayton accords, but deadlock over their prosecution may make this hard to enforce. So far few countries have contributed to the estimated cost of £326 million for running the

Ken Scott, the British depuhead of the OSCE mission. admits the obstacles are enormous and that there has been little co-operation from the parties. Given the difficulty of crossing ceasefire lines, a national election is probably impossible and candidates will have to stand in either the Serb or the Muslim-Croat

If the OSCE decides the conditions for free elections do not exist, they will be postponed. If that happens, the Nato-led Implementation Force will be under strong pressure to stay, as there will be no other mechanism to enforce the Dayton accords. Americans. however, have already indicated they will not remain beyond the one-vear mandate.

According to General Pavel Grachev, the Russian Defence Minister, the military will halt its operations, characterised in recent weeks by brutal air and artillery attacks.

"Military actions alone cannot step up the process of resolving the situation in Chechenia," he said in Grozny, the capital of Chechenia. His remarks yesterday were the clearest sign yet about the

Nicotine spray is approved in US for heavy smokers

FROM IAN BRODIE IN WASHINGTON

A NICOTINE nasal spray was approved yesterday for heavy cigarette smokers in America who are trying to give up. It will go on sale later this year under the name Nicotrol NS and will require a doctor's prescription.

Smokers will be instructed to inhale one or two squirts in each nostril every hour, with never more than five doses an hour. Each dose will contain one milligram of nicotine, about one cigarette's worth. The pump bottle will contain 100 milligrams of nicotine solution and users will be warned that 40 milligrams taken at once can be lethal.

In giving approval, the US Food and Drug Administration indicated concern that some smokers might become as addicted to snorting the spray as they were to cigarettes. One desperate woman in a clinical trial watered down her supply of spray to make it last longer before she eventually gave up and returned to cigarettes.

The FDA has asked the spray's developer, Pharmacia and Upjohn, to establish a plan with doctors to monitor any adverse effects. They must also endeavour to keep the spray out of the hands of teenagers under 18, who are not supposed to use it. In tests, the spray's success rate was no better than for nicotine gum or the patch. Studies of 730 smokers found that a quarter of those who received it gave up cigarettes for at least a year while only 13 per cent of those on a placebo managed to stop smoking.

Smokers' brains will absorb less nicotine from the spray than from cigarettes, according to Richard Hurt, director of the nicotine dependency centre at the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota. He explained that nicotine inhaled through ciga-rettes goes straight to the heart and is pumped to the brain in five heartbeats while Nicotrol circulates through the blood before reaching the heart and the brain.

The spray is being launched at a time when the US tobacco industry is under intense scrutiny by the Government amid allegations that tobacco executives lied to Congress in denying that nicotine was addictive.

President Clinton joined the fray this week, describing cigarettes as the number one health threat to young people.

Day three of our week-long guide to help you to check your child's progress through the national curriculum

The science of success

in espon erhaps it is the advent of league tables or the increasing number of practice papers on sale in the shops, but parents and children seem to be more anxious about this year's tests for 11-year-olds. Children are often aware of the concern of their parents and that their teachers are hoping that they will do themselves, and the school, credit. Against this background of mild anxiety. they are confronted by additional problems in the science

Since the advent of the national curriculum, science has had a much higher profile in primary schools, and concepts I was taught for O level ! now teach to 10 and 11-yearolds. However, gone is the theoretical way of working: children are now encouraged to develop a scientific way of thinking.

They learn how to devise a fair test, interpret results analytically and draw logical conclusions from their results all very different from the factual recall required by the test. In addition, the curriculum is often delivered spirally over a four-year cycle, so that each aspect is covered twice at different levels. This means that children may meet certain topics when they are seven, again at nine, but do not get tested on them until nearly 18 months later.

So, how can parents help? Firstly, they can stop getting worried. Every child will also be given a level of achievement by their teacher based on work done over the previous year. This has equal status with the test result and is presented

Schools will be acclimatising children to the test formats and many do "practice runs", using previous years' papers. These develop the children's exam techniques and also help to remind them

Head teacher Bridget Methuen gives the lowdown on the topics 11-year-olds should be familiar with for this year's science tests

Children at Snape Primary School practise the appliance of science as they prepare for the forthcoming tests of work done in the previous years. General revision at home is a great help, but parents should be wary of inducing extra stress. Remember these are not GCSEs.

All three strands of science tested will feature in both of the papers. The following is a brief outline of what is

Tougher tests lie in store

CHILDREN are expected to show a good grasp of scientific vocabulary in their science tests at 11 but will be allowed some leeway with the spelling of difficult words.

Markers did not discount incorrect spellings of technical words last year unless they were unrecognisable. For ex-"constration" marked wrong but "condensachon" correct. Those who chose to describe the effect of the Sun on the Earth as it rotated, rather than illustrate it, tended to receive higher marks last year.

Generally, questions will be more demanding because assessors considered the range too narrow at Level 5 last summer. The Levels 3 to 5 science tests for 11-year-olds will contain 15 per cent more questions but children will have 35 minutes for each

Forces caused some problems last year and assessors pointed out that children should know that forces act in specific directions and should be indicated with straight lines, using arrows to show their direction. This year's tests will require extra knowledge of the effect of forces, for example, how the speed of an object may be changed.

Many children did not know the difference between explaining and describing. Responding to pictures of sug-ar in liquid. "the sugar has dissolved" was a correct answer but "the sugar seems to have disappeared was wrong.

Donna Karan and her customers are celebrating ten years of understated dressing for women on the move hen designer Donna Karan unveils her latest designs in New York this week she will have extra cause to celebrate. Her company is now ten years old. Karan founded her business on little more than a foundation garment itself, taking her inspiration for her stretch jersey body from Martha Graham's dance leotard. Like the cleverest of concepts, it was an achingly simple idea: sometimes wrapped with an additional length of fabric which doubled as a

pareo skirt, or with a crisp

white shirt attached. "At the time I didn't think of as revolutionary," says Karan. Fashion myth would have it that Karan's career began when the designer asked herself "What do I really need in my wardrobe?" In response she created her own line of clothing, a wardrobe full of understated easy pieces which fitted together. Uncomplicated, modern and luxurious, belitting a fast-moving female on Seventh Avenue, it soon clicked with high-the world over. A loyal clientele was formed. Karan's label and her customers have grown up together because, the designer says, she understands their needs. They are the same as her own. As she gets older she believes this to be even more important.

"Probably more so, because there are more things to think about," says Karan, who describes herself as a problem solver. "Your body shifts." Karan is all too aware that women are inundated with too many clothes. She calls it "product pollution".

"Fashion is going too fast," she says. "Everyone wants new, new, new, and the customer becomes very con-fused." This prompted Karan

Fashion journalist of the year to introduce the Essentials collection, so that a woman can always go into a store and buy that black suit or white shirt. "Great items to add to what you already own," she says. "You don't have to start over each season."

Every season she reappraises the collection. It is not the same collection you saw three years ago — a lapel on a jacket may be wider, a trouser narrower, a hemline shorter. There are always new things added to the line. "The things women like and want more of." This season they include a leather jacket cut like a motorcycle jacket but in the softest of skins, a little sweater ("a sleek finish under a jacket or to top a grand ballgown skirt"), a tux-edo jacket which works worn over a black dress or as part of a suit, a knit rib dress (the newest foundation"), and the ubiquitous white shirt.

As fashion in the 1990s gives women more choice, what does Donna Karan offer?

"I like to have a system of dressing to make life easy. Fabrics which can go from day to evening. Clothes which are packable, a pair of shoes to go with anything. It's no longer about long or short. Clothes need to be comfortable, flexi-week. I sit in my consulting room listening to people in the centre of their thing. distress. At the centre of their concerns is a wish to be living their lives unencumbered by chronic anxieties, insecurities, despair, rages or depressions, Although some media coverage of psychotherapy might suggest otherwise, therapy is not a soft option, a kind of massage of the soul, a self-indulgent 50 minutes, or a laddish part of the lives of the well-heeled and well-educated. Rather, it is sought when other means for change have been exhausted: when friends, families, lovers and teachers have been or worse, even a dose of ideology unable to provide the means to address the pain that so troubles

Of late, we are used to family relationships being used for political gain by politicians who, misunderstanding either wilfully. mendaciously or ignorantly the complex texture of emotional life, make a rhetorical call for a return to family values — to a presumed two-parent idyll that never was from within which most of my patients were raised. The family is presented as a harmonious, supportive unit in which conflict is managed, responsibility taken on

All the economic pressures, the shifts in gender relations and the worries about work are miraculously meant to be absorbed and processed in the family. The society and a treatment plant for society's sewage. The tensions between parents and children; between the sexes: the demands on women to care for the elderly and the young: the restructuring of work; the very things that make individuals and groups of individ-uals unstable, instead of being engaged within the political debate, are given a sleight of hand - to cover them up.

"Not us." say the politicians.
"It's the lack of family values that's to blame."

part of this nostalgic call by politicians to the family speaks to us and acts as a temporary balm, because the search for certainty, for stability, for security, is something we can all relate to. We crave these in the face of political, economic and social uncertainty and we crave these in the face of lives lived with insufficient emotional sustenance.

But what sense can we make of our desires today? The image of the family unit is the gossamer over which we stretch our needs for attachment, for intimacy and autonomy. Where our politicians and policymakers are inclined to look at the forms of attachment.

fantasise stable relationships, hearts and flowers romances, we would do well to look rather at what intimate human engagement requires and supplies; what makes relationships work.

Most importantly, we need to recognise that one of our human dilemmas is that relationships can be especially adhesive when they are patently destructive.

Part of what psychoanalysis allows us to see is that when the early environment can provide relationships in which the baby can have its initiatives responded to with care, when the needs of the child can be held in mind, the child grows up with the emotional base to be a partner in creating and maintaining attachments which are secure and stable. It can manage inside itself the conscquences of disappointment, of things going wrong. Where early life fails, the individual grows up experiencing a lack of self-regard along a continuum from insecurity to self-hate. The hurtful relationship cannot be given up but is like a manade binding the person to the emotional pith of that relationship. To put it starkly: if good relationships in early life incline one to seek out their repetition, so does the influence of unsatisfactory relationships. We are disposed to repeat what is, even if that has been felt to be insufficient, for that is how inside ourselves we experience relationship. We know no other.

The extent to which one has been let down by a parental relationship is the extent to which, in the unconscious, that parent is still much wanted. Meanwhile, in the outside world, the experience of unsatisfactory relating will tilt the person unwittingly to seek, attract and confirm that experi-

they try to challenge it. The channels for receiving a more wholesome relationship are closed. Bad relationships can't easily be given up. They are hard to digest and be done with. They linger and fester, unleashing emotional havoc on others, binding up psychic energy so that engagement in the world is often reactive rather than creative.

In trying to build enabling relationships in a Risk Society so that we contribute and shape that society rather than feel ourselves to be constantly reactive, blown off course and rushing to catch up with it we require a base of emotional security. Emotional security is the basis of autonomy. Particularly in times of rapid unmapped change, the capacity to embrace what is, to think and to act out of that thoughtfulness, depends upon the internalisation of enabling attachments.

One thing that skews our relationships is our gender arrangements. For years the myth was that women were dependent and men independent. But what underpins men and supports their apparent autonomy? What makes it possible for men to feel able to take on challenges in the world, in so far as they have; to take a personal authority, to feel unbur-ence in new relationships, even as dened by deep insecurities? What emotional services have men historically received that have sustained their sense of indepen-

> What twist has allowed women to be seen as emotionally dependent when it is obvious that their role has been to provide a relation ship on which others may depend without anticipating such a relationship for themselves?

am not arguing that men are dependent and women not. I am suggesting that in any consideration of how we build quality relationships, and the means to adapt to the challenges of the Risk Society, the question of the disposition of emotional dependency needs and emotional capacities between women and men needs to be confronted and the issues of autonomy and dependency, and their relationship to one another understood and refashioned so emotional resilience is more widely available.

We need not remain mystified about what makes enabling relationships. Relationships that enable are those which allow a full experience of the other, which allow for a range of emotional responses to be registered rather than interfered with. They don't consist of carving up emotions and letting men carry one set and women another. Adults who can ask of one another how they are and stick around for a genuine reply without trying to fix. transform, deny or ridicule the responses they get, are providing enabling relationships.

Such relating depends on a capacity to resonate with another emotionally without being swamped, to empathise without feeling impelled to make better, so that there is space for those responses so often disregarded because they fail the test of drama. Enabling relationships depend upon an equal emotional exchange and a certain emotional fluency. Enabling relationships make it possible for us to hold contradictory feelings simultaneously, rather than retreat into emotional fundamentalism where all is good or bad or love and hate and where scapegoating — projecting — dominates our relation to self and others.

The capacity to manage com-plex emotional lives is a political issue. It makes for a robust population which can think about the wider political issues rather than being emotionally manipu-lated by them — one which can refuse the false conflation of the private and the public and which can open up new issues in the

There might not be enough enthusiasm to keep people up all night watching the full, live, unexpurgated version as it is beamed from a narcissistically quivering LA but — and this seems to be odder, insomniac fanaticism being somewhat easito understand than Hearty concern -- a number of people I spoke to yesterday morning told me, unashamedly, that they wouldn't be listening to or just so they wouldn't find out who got what before the BBC showed the highlights last night. One begins to fear for one's friends.

Nevertheless, I did watch it, the whole damn shoot. And although I might reassure myself that it was all in the line of duty, I began to see the appeal. For the British audience, the lure is twofold. In the first instance we see our worst impressions of Americans in general, and actors in particular, confirmed; and in the second — and this is the truly more pleasurable aspect — we get to see people lose, publicly and big time. Those motivations apart, at least for the moment, the Awards ceremony is ideally Truth to tell, this year things were looking a bit lacklustre on that front. Whoopi Goldberg is too acerbic a personality to an navel-gazing. Her open-ing riff about the ribbons people had asked her to wear (red for Aids awareness, purple for breast cancer awareness, milk-white "mad cow" awareness and so forth) was about as anti-Hollywood as you could get and still get a round of applause.

But as the show progressed, the stars began to show their true colours. Mira Sorvino — best supporting actress in Woody Allen's Mighty Aphrodite - turned in sterling acceptance speech. culminating in a sentimental paean of praise for her father, Paul, who was then shown veeping openly and bloatedly in his seat. Best actress (and how) Susan Sarandon, who is always written about as an admirable type of anti-luvvie, was full of dazed oh-my-ohmys, not being able to get over her surprise at even being included among such fine actors" (Nicolas Cage later expressed the same modest sentiment), and ended her speech: "May we all in our homes and in our hearts find a way to non-violently end violence and heal."

But it's not surprising that Hollywood is sentimental, it's built on sentiment. Death must therefore be emotionally venerated. There isn't quite an award for Best Dead Person but there is a roll call, throatily itemised, of "Academy mem-

One can't help feeling. however, that Louis Malle's high rating (justly earned, that I don't dispute) isn't more of an indication that the Hollywood audience wanted to show they knew how to appreciate an arthouse movie director. At other times, the audience

 that's to say, the actors behaved quite breathtakingly. Despite Goldberg's cynicism, Hollywood, a reactionary town, has always been strangely insistent on showing a degree of liberal compassion. Caring about the right things and showing you care is important. It wants to be right-

But it seems to me grossly patronising -and, for what it's worth distinctly unPC - to clap someone for being paralysed

It would be wrong to say that we enjoy the discomfiture of the actors, since none of them showed any sign of knowing that it might have been seemly to be discomfited. But at least we know that by the end of the evening there have been more losers than winners. And that seems to

Where's the beef? You decide

THERE'S SOMETHING I don't understand: why does this Government, which has always been keen to show itself the party that believes in choice, so evidently believe we have no real right to choose to stop eating British

However infinitesimal the risks (and I'm sure the only reason we feel them to be greater than they probably are is because we've been led to believe they were less than they are, nothing alters the fact that we are perfectly free to eat what we want, or not eat what we don't want. We don't need to justify ourselves.

People do justify themselves, though, and it's because they are afraid of being thought wimps. Thus people are actually boasting, for example, of having had steak for lunch. I don't quite get it myself, but then I have never understood why people seem to think the stronger the curry they can put away the better light it puts them

The idea that eating beef is macho is hardly new, of course, but this boasting is more than that. It's as if showing a glorious unconcern for what is troubling others — the little people — shows The risk is small, so it is petty of us, it is implied, even to heed it. I see the point of running risks if we having something to gain thereby, but this is rather a different matter.

Anyway, if one is worried about eating beef, why do so? If to eat it gives us more anxiety than pleasure, then not to is hardly a deprivation. Our duty is not foremost to the farmers of Great Britain, as the Government might have been wise to recognise. My position here is that I'll eat organic beef, or as good as, if it comes from my butcher. Mr Lidgate. In other words, I trust him and he trusts his farmers, which is how it should be.

But why anyone should feel under pressure to pretend an unfelt insouciance is beyond me: it's not, after all, as if we trusted the Government.

Our children may outsmart us — but there is a flaw

ocked as those of all true Times people currently are, your ear may be amazed to hear that it is mine which has just heard the sound of the cuckoo. It should not be amazed: there is nothing odd about my hearing the sound so early, for this was no ordinary cuckoo. It was a Midwich Cuckoo, and I hear it all the time. I hear it whenever there is any technological advance. You will recall that John Wyndham, having nearly frightened the life out of us with the idea of plants who were smarter than we were, went on completely to frighten the life out of us with the idea of children who were smarter than we were. For, like the triffids before them, the toddlers of Midwich village had been transmuted into smart-arse monsters against whom grown-ups did not stand

Could Wyndham have found a more potent dread to tap? Was there ever a parent who, even as it preened over the latest manifestation of offspring cleverness, didn't ex-perience an uneasy twinge that here was something which any moment now could be too hot to handle? And was that ever truer than it is today, when a generation of children ready for the next generation of computers leaves wallowing in its wake a generation of adults not yet ready for the last one?

That is why I have just heard the cry of the Midwich Cuckoo at its shrillest. I heard it the moment after our radiant Heritage Secretary announced that she was considering the V-chip, which would empower parents to delete from the TV set anything they didn't want their kids to watch; and where I heard it was in the instant response of parents terror-stricken that their kids would be able to handle the V-chip far more cleverly than they ever could. Not only would they be able to fiddle with it to release all the sex and vio-lence they wanted, they would be able to fid-dle with it to exact a terrible revenge: adult screens would go blank in the middle of Brookside. Pride and Prejudice would suddenly turn into Beavis and Butthead, Jeremy Paxman would swivel in his seat to find himself facing a satellited Milanese housewife pulling her suspender-belt off. Stick this chip into the family box, wailed the parents, and it will immediately become Pandora's.

is there, then, nothing to be done? I should not be here if there were. I may not have a complete answer, but I believe I have enough of one to hope that parents may now spend less time staring sleepless at the ceiling. wondering how long it will take their brood to work out their Pin numbers, bypass their phone-lock codes, spring their safe combina-tions, deduce their PC passwords, and pull any other techno-stunt necessary to transfer the family jewels to a Cayman account so electronically covert as to be inaccessible to anyone over the age of nine. I believe this because someone of the age of nine came to stay last weekend, and, by sheer coincidence. I found a flaw in his technobility which might just be the salvation of us all.

did not, mind, find it for some time. I took him to see the techno-wondrous Toy Story and asked if he'd enjoyed it. He explained how they'd made it. We went home, and he did umpteen things with my computer I didn't even know it did, and then when I tried to, it didn't. A bit later, he spotted a copy of Captain Hook on my video shelf and I said he could take it, and he said he wouldn't need to take it if I had a second VCR, and I had, so he did something with wires, and after that we had two conies.

And then he wanted to call home. I pointed to the phone. He looked at me. The phone has a dial. I showed him how to dial. He couldn't do it. The dial took so long to return to rest that he lost track of which of the ll numbers he had just dialled. He was a keypad kid. And I suddenly knew how to thwart those who have grown up with the new technology. You hit them with the old technology. He could not call Grand Cayman on this phone, even if he twigged my Pin number; and if, moreover, I stuck to a cheque-book, I would not even need a Pin number for him to twig.

And the V-chip? When I was nine, my father bought our first TV set. It had big walnut doors, with a keyhole. My father kept the key in his pocket. Too much Muffin the Mule might be bad for you.

Use and abuse of science

o not laugh. This has been National Science Week. Scientists across the land have been spreading the messi-anic "good news" that science is alive and exciting. There have been 5,000 events. The Internet has hummed. But while the publicists have fiddled, Rome has burned. Rarely has the role of the scientist in public life looked more sad, or public trust in his methods been more fragile.

Last year, I detected a new strain in what is now Britain's annual food-scare ritual. It is called Mad Politician Disease, closely related to another virulent strain called Mad Newspaper Syndrome. Both are now raging unchecked, and the infection has spread to Brussels. (Only a cull of the national herd of politicians and journalists offers hope of cure.) What is not clear is the relation of this phenomenon to last week's outbreak of Scientist Inferiority Complex. This too is now rampant. When I saw that the Trade Department had given over its Victoria Street basement for an activity called "Ready, Ser96, Go". I knew the epidemic had taken hold.

In the House of Commons last week, the Agriculture and Health Secretaries, Douglas Hogg and Stephen Dorrell. both struggled to dump responsibility for the possible slaughter of thousands of cows on the shoulders of science. Don't ask us what has gone wrong, they said with one voice, ask the scientists. It would, they clearly hoped, be a verbal hop and a skip to, don't blame us, blame them. Ministers were only doing what they were told.

Last December the scientists told them that beef was safe. There was no evidence of a link between a dwindling outbreak of cattle BSE and a few random cases of human CJD. They put the adjective "inconceivable" before the much-abused noun, risk. Ministers took their word for it and cheered. Now, on the basis of the same clinical evidence (or lack of it), the scientists say that they are not so sure. They have put the word inconceivable in a test-tube, added a coincidence or two, heated them to hysteria point, and produced a rather different adjective: extremely small. To a scientist, this might be no more than a matter of experimental linguistics. To a politician, it freezes bone to marrow and drains blood from every cell. How big is extremely small? A mere adverb qualifies the adjective small, but a chasm divides it from inPublic respect for scientists has been sacrificed during the BSE fiasco conceivable. What is the difference? We don't know, say the scientists. Spongiform encephalo-pathologists are not required to have English A level. Nor do they include probability theorists in their number. After last Sunday's meeting they gave five reasons why they could not quantify the apparent shift in risk since last December. These include the small number of humans infected with what appears a new strain, the resulting lack of data on "infectivity", and the large species barrier between cattle and humans. The implication was that the public should merely know that, of ten new cases of CJD in Britain, seven appear to have had contact with farm animals fed before the 1989 ban on possibly contaminated offal. the previous CJD cases in Britain and on the Continent, which remain inexplicable. This was hardly enough. We know that in the absence of causal links, science can only work on probabilities. As with possibly environmental conditions such as leukaemia and some cancers. scientists can only look for clusters and investigate coincidences. But I cannot see why this so-called "evidence" could not have been converted into quantified risk. Jargon on infectivity is no help. I want to know where beef-eating stands on the spectrum of reckless liberties that I take with my body every hour of every day. I do not want to hear about inconceivables or extremely smalls. I want to know, from those more knowledgeable than I, where a steak stands alongside an oyster, a North Sea mackerel a boiled egg and running for the bus. Is it a chance in a million of catching CDJ or a chance in ten million? I am grown up. I can take it on the chin.

In the event, probability was not the scientists' department. But the real catastrophe was what happened next. Science put its reputation at the disposal of politics. The result has been a truly epic systems failure in scientific communication. "Can we still trust them?" cried the Daily Express. "Could it be worse than Aids?" screamed the Daily Mail. Cartoonists had a field day with mad cows, psychiatric vets, and fastidious cannibals. The Labour Party had French farmers cheering as it demanded the removal of British beef from school menus. The gleeful response of our European "partners" to this discomfiture is still running.

Pre-eminent cause for the failure must be the politicisation of what was at root a matter of statistics. Had ministers kept their fingers out of the pie, the integrity of the advice given them might have been more widely respected. Mr Dorrell now turns up to what seem like hourly media interviews with > a scientist at his side. like Don Quixote with Sancho Panza. It is hopeless to plead that pendent" when he is patently there to save the minister's bacon. As the antics this week of both Ms Harman and Paddy Ashdown have shown, parliamentary flesh and blood cannot treat a minister as a mere conduit for "independent advice". He must be opposed. If that means rubbishing science, too bad.

This is a disaster for the reputation of science in government. The National Farmers' Union indicated yesterday that the BSE affair had gone "beyond science". This means that the union is happy that enough is being done to eradicate BSE in Britain, but regards enough as no longer sufficient. A "gesture" is apparently required to restore confidence. The gesture may include the mass slaughter of perfectly healthy animals and huge financial compensation. Like some primitive tribe, we are expected to immolate our property to propitiate the raging gods.

The Government should plainly have left the chairman of the spongiform advisory committee and its own Chief Medical Officer to handle last week's terminological adjustment. The matter had nothing to do with party politics. If the Agriculture Ministry was dilatory.

as has been claimed, in enforcing the ban on scrapie-infected cattle feed after 1989, that merits a select committee inquiry. Last week, the issue was what applied science had to say about risk. On that at least, science was clear: the risk in eating beef remained so tiny as not to merit further action on anyone's part. including the Government's.

If ministers believed that this was a scientific rather than a political judgment, why did they not let the scientists talk for themselves? The very fact of ministers making the announcement tainted the independence of the advice. So did the venue. I cannot imagine a worse place to discuss the shifting nuances of public health than the chamber of the House of Commons. It is like adjusting a watch with a monkey wrench. After watching Ms Harman and Mr Dorrell abusing each other on Monday, I was not surprised when Brussels concluded that enough was enough, and French Customs turned back British beef lorries. I imagine they would do the same to British politicians.

Dorrell and M sonify sweet reason in this matter. Their actions have been open and their judgments fair. But the result of their hijacking of science to the cause of government is hysteria, panic and possibly huge expense. The system for conveying important information to the public has collapsed and led to grotesque distortion. British farming - and public administration - has been humiliated.

Science did not fail. It bravely stated the extent of its uncertainty. What failed was the public reception of the message of science. Rectifying this has nothing to do with more science teaching or more science funding or more national science weeks. Such public relations merely makes science seem paranoid and intellectually childish. The failure has been in the response of politics to the actions of science.

Last week the Government intervened to "nationalise" what most countries would have left as a non-partisan, industrial and public health matter. The reason is that modern British government cannot keep its hands off anything. The price will be paid not by farmers or ministers but by taxpayers. It will be paid in a diminished public respect for science. That is most unfair. The remedy lies in scientists recovering sovereignty over their own judgments, rather than dancing round maypoles while governments toss coins.

The culture of the Forces is in flux, says

Sue Cameron

That a time they are having in Whitehall, Racism, sodomy, V V missing art treasures — and that is just in the Ministry of Defence. Tomorrow the ministry will unveil plans to counteract racism. in response to a report by the Commission for Racial Equality, which has uncovered evidence of discrimination within the Services in general and in the Household Cavalry in particular. Meanwhile, service chiefs and senior defence civil servants are wondering whether the European Court of Human Rights will overturn their ban on homosexuals in the Forces - a ban so draconian that it damns a man for having homosexual tendencies even if he does not betray this by word or deed.

Today, however, the Defence Ministry's most senior civil servant, Richard Mottram, will face a grilling from MPs not on one of these major concerns for his £22 billion department, but about £100,000 worth of prints and paintings which have gone missing, apparently during reorganisations in the 1980s. The irony is that the ministry can expect woeful publicity on all these fronts just as it is trying to rethink some of its outdated practices. Its efforts underline the difficulties of managing change in a world of publicity and political

The Ministry of Defence shows how much-maligned watchdog bodies such as the Commission for Racial Equality can improve the conduct of institutions. The commission's report was prompted by an incident when a man was seconded from the Royal Engineers to the Household Cavalry - and was promptly sent back again when he was found to be black. It is believed to show that while non-whites make up around 5 per cent of the general population, they account for less than 1.5 per cent of the Armed Forces, and well under I per cent of the Household Cavalry.

Privately, officials admit many in the ministry never really believed that equality legislation applied to them. As a result, monitoring of the recruitment and treatment of people from ethnic minorities was lax or worse. Class attitudes have militated against racial fairness in certain regiments, where officers were recruited because they had been to a particular public school or because they were the ; fathers sons. But it would of course be perverse to stop recruiting from a school that has provided good people in the past, especially as all who are accepted have to pass the entrance exams.

There is evidence that sometimes certain regiments with the best of intentions. It is easy to see how black recruits might be discouraged from joining the Household Division for fear that they would be picked on. And soldiers are notoriously resistant to political correctness, victimising anyone who stands out, whether for being black. Welsh or short-sighted. Senior officers in some units have said that if they are to have black recruits they want two or three, not one. But many people would think that approach discriminatory too.

The ministry's new measures may not go as far as some in the race relations industry would like, but they will mark the start of a real drive to change attitudes. They are expected to include the appointment of race relations advisers to all units to guide commanding officers; leaflets for all members of the Forces, spelling out the equal opportunities policy: new complaints procedures; and much tighter monitoring of the recruitment and promotion of members of ethnic minorities.

7 hether the changes would have come about without presented from the commission is doubtful. It may be a salutary lesson to those who deride such bodies that they can enforce reform in areas where it is badly needed and where it might not otherwise be brought about at all. At the same 🥏 time, senior people in the ministry deserve credit for deciding to update some antediluvian attitudes.

Racial equality is not the only area where they are making the attempt, although when it comes to the treatment of homosexuals and lesbians the ministry should be congratulated more for the thoroughness of its research than for the result. It was again an outsider - a senior judge — who suggested a review of the Forces' attitude to homosexuals. although the court upheld their right to discriminate against them. The ministry duly undertook research, which involved sending questionnaires to 15 per cent of the 200,000 members of the Armed Forces, finding out how America's "don't ask, don't tell" practice works, and producing a 400page report. The decision of the Defence Council - composed of ministers, civil servants and military chiefs - was to ban homosexuals, whether overt or

The justification was that the research shows that 60 per cent of service personnel oppose a "don't ask, don't tell" policy, with 20 per cent in favour and 20 per cent expressing no opinion. The ministry feared that such a policy would offend civilian homosexuals, who would see it as hypocritical or condemnatory.

The ban on overt homosexuality is understandable, whether you agree with it or not; but to outlaw "don't ask, don't tell" lest it raise suspicions about individuals is risible, and there is a good chance the European Court of Human Rights will overturn the ban. It will be interesting to see how far the ministry will be prepared to go in revamping attitudes if that happens.

Sacred cows

BEFORE Harriet Harman kills off our national herd, I feel she should be apprised of the bovine news from India. The World Hindu Council in Delhi will meet today to consider offering religious asylum to some of our unwanted beasts.

Hindus are appalled by the prospect of a national slaughter: they believe that cows should be treated as members of the family. Every part of the cow is medicinal." explains Giriraj Kishore. the Secretary General of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad Party, or World Hindu Council, "Its milk is medicinal. Its dung is antiradioactive and a germ-killer - I am using cow-dung soap and it has removed my itch." (Must try that one.)

"We are meeting tomorrow," he goes on, "to decide what to do with this British problem. We can send representation to Britain to argue that the cow should be saved. And we will consider offering some of the British cows sacred refuge in India." The notion has its precedent, of course. In 1985, The Times of India reported that Mr Muni Shushil Kumar, of the World Parliament of Religions, was planning to buy 260,000 EEC carrie, earmarked for slaughter because of tighter milk quotas, and ship them to India to make them sacred.

Mr Kumar's plan slipped at the first cattle grid because of financial difficulties, but there is excited cud-chewing now in the Northamptonshire byre of my Uncle Roddy. I'm told that the plaintive lowing of his favourite cow, Harriet. (no beauty but a strap-

Eddie's song

CELEBRITY fans of The Archers are dusting down their ten-gallon hats for an ol' hoedown on the Grange Farm ranch. A Country Music album being recorded by Eddie Grundy (Trevor Harrison) has stars of the music world in a delirious spin.

The far-from-rural crooner Elvis Costello has already donated a song for Harrison to record, and negotiations with other stars are advanced. "We are talking Sir Cliff Richard and Billy Connolly. Our people are negotiating with their people," says a hipster from Demon Records, which is producing the album. Both Sir Cliff and Connolly are Archers addicts. At his wedding to the actress Pamela Stephenson on the island of Fiji, Connolly sought out a native choir, which sung out the theme tune to a bagpipe accompaniment.

A memorandum informs staff that, from next month, each department will be asked to pay £2 to have its fridges cleaned. Earthy types who choose not to avail themselves of the service will be required to sign a disclaimer absolving the BBC of blame.

HERE WE GO AGAIN

The cow crisis exposes, once more, Major's fatal flaw

Less than a year after this Government was elected it suffered a devastating assault on its credibility. With its remaining lifespan now in months another blow has been dealt to faith in Conservative competence. John Major may have ERM engraved on his heart but BSE is bidding fair to be tattooed alongside.

There is more than an element of ill-luck in this. Prudent steps were taken as far back as 1989 to minimise danger. The cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease which sparked the current scare, if they come from infected beed, were contracted before 1989. Throughout this week ministers have sought to deal plainly in the devalued currency of scientific opinion. But all that is set at very little in comparison to the overwhelming impression of an administration, once more, at the mercy of events instead of shaping them.

Generous voters might conclude that Mr Major's Government is just plain unlucky. But, even though the Prime Minister has been dealt a succession of poor hands, there is a pattern to the way he has played many of them that points to a flaw in his style of government. Too often Mr Major has held to a position long after it should have been abandoned, and then when the maximum disadvantage has accrued, he has folded.

From the first, forlorn defence of David Mellor's Cabinet post to the disaster of Black Wednesday, through the subsequent support and then ignominious ditching of Norman Lamont to the caving-in on qualified majority voting in the EU and the futile opposition to Lord Nolan's recommendations on disclosure of MPs' earnings. the pattern recurs.

The beef scare seems to be following the familiar path. As with Nolan, the Government appears to be on the side of the greedy, in this case farmers rather than MPs, but looks set to leave them poorer, and angrier, at the end of the affair. As with the ERM, radical measures, devaluation then and slaughter now, were pressed from outside, considered, and then rejected only to become ever more likely as a result of relentless market pressure. It is devoutly to be hoped, for the sake of the beef industry, and the Conservative Party, that history does not repeat itself once again in a manner which would be farcical for the Tories but tragic for the farmers.

Potentially most damaging of all is the allegation that the slaughter of cattle was rejected by ministers because they leared the impact on the Exchequer. The idea that decisions on food safety should be so influenced by public spending considerations could alarm even those who are least cynical of ministerial motives.

Europe may yet offer some salvation. The EU's decision to ban British beef provides a rallying point. Revelations that the spread of disease in continental herds may have been hidden lend principled weight to patriotic outrage. It has always seemed odd, given the nature of the cattle trade, that BSE should appear so prevalent in the UK and so very rare elsewhere. Reports from Italy suggest the picture is altogether more complex than many in Europe would wish. But, as with the ERM, crises abroad are cold comfort for those afflicted at home,

Labour has little to lose by pressing home its political advantage. The constituencies it seeks to win are predominantly suburban or semi-industrial, many of them in younger towns such as Luton, Swindon or Bolton where the party that poses as mother's helper rather than farmer's friend will benefit. Labour's stance is not without risks. Older figures in the Shadow Cabinet are cautious about a position which may appear unpatriotic. Commitments pressed on the Government now may have to be paid for by a Labour administration next year. The argument advanced by Peter Mandelson and Harriet Harman that deregulation is responsible for the crisis in what is still Britain's most heavily regulated industry will not convince everyone. But, as with executive pay. Labour is happy to exploit populist discontent. It may make the job of governing in future more difficult but it also makes it more likely.

Sharebuyers may be less at risk from Labour than they think

The one pledge that is guaranteed to raise the roof at a Labour Party gathering is to a "publicly owned, publicly accountable" railway system. The promise has been made so often that it is surprising that it has not simply been shortened to POPA, as onemember-one-vote became OMOV. The trouble is, a Labour government would not have the money to buy back Railtrack or the operators. Tony Blair and Gordon Brown know this; but they have been able to keep the Left happy with this meaningless mantra until now.

Meaning will, however, have to be inserted into it — and soon. The prospectus for the privatisation of Railtrack, whose advertising campaign started yesterday, will be published next month, and it will have to contain a detailed section on "political risk". This is a euphemism for the danger that Labour might confiscate Railtrack shareholders' voting rights, dividends or shares, or regulate the company's profits out of

So far Labour has adopted a doublepronged approach. On one side are Mr Brown and Clare Short, Shadow Transport Secretary, who want to shift subsidy from the operators to Railtrack in return for cutting the track charges to operators. Once Railtrack is in receipt of large sums from the Government, they think that this could act as a surrogate for public ownership. On the other side are John Prescott, deputy leader and former occupant of Ms Short's job, and Brian Wilson, her deputy. They want to convert ordinary shares to preference shares, thus transferring shareholders' voting rights to the Government. This would require primary legislation and would be hugely complex.

Messrs Prescott and Wilson are convinced that popular opinion is on their side. Leftwing opinion certainly is: renationalisation of rail is the sop that is always thrown to the Left in return for other "new" Labour policies. But Labour has worked hard and to considerable effect to gain goodwill in the City. The trust that it has secured is tragile enough to be destroyed if the party were to start interfering with shareholders' rights except through buying fairly in the market. Is Mr Blair really going to put the demands of the RMT rail union (which, incidentally, has several members of Arthur Scargill's new party on its executive) above the goodwill of the City?

The chances are that Ms Short's subsidy option will be adopted. As far as the Left is concerned, this will be a fudge. Giving a company a subsidy is no substitute for ownership. It is an indirect and not even guaranteed form of control: that is all. It could not be exchanged for equity except either by buying shares, which would be too expensive, or by diluting the equity, which shareholders would not tolerate.

Labour can always continue to harbour a theoretical long-term aspiration to renationalisation. But, like common ownership of the means of production, distribution and exchange, it is never going to be put into practice. Each time that the party conference calls for renationalisation, the Chancellor of the day merely has to ask activists from which public service they would like to take the several billion pounds that a buyback would cost. Education? Health? Putting the unemployed back to work? For new Railtrack shareholders, the political risk is likely to be less than the discount on the new shares may suggest.

TIE ME UP, TIE ME DOWN

Why the Oscars are not half as smart as they used to be

We should not really complain about the Oscars. After all, our Emma Thompson won a wee gong - even though her unattractive acceptance speech deserved only brickbats - and a film with a Scots theme, Braveheart, won the award for best picture in sight. But we do have a complaint, and it has nothing to do with the judges' decisions: what happened to the black tie and why was this formal dress given such short shrift by America's gifted great and good?

One should not exaggerate the emergency. of course, but America's film stars have let the starched side down. Black tie may have been a British invention, but its preservation as a smart man's must-wear is pure New World good sense.

Ever since Griswold Lorrilard introduced the dinner jacket at his club at Tuxedo, New York, in 1886, the dress-coat without tails (worn in the evening as a less formal alternative to the swallow-tailed "soup and fish has been the preferred dinner-wear of elegant men around the world. But only in America does it still survive with its dignity intact: even in once-stuffy Britain, where glad rags used to be de rigueur, black tie risks confinement to Oxbridge high tables. ambitious undergraduate dining societies and London livery companies. For Hollywood to turn its back on the tuxedo is a serious affair indeed. Informal modern menswear cannot match its muted elegance, even on manicured male film bodies. Quentin Letts, writing today on our foreign pages, describes the full horror of the decline - from which account a wider question must emerge.

What use is Hollywood's decadence if it springs not from formality? Smooth Clark Gable often leant across and kissed his swooning ladies on screen with his tuxedo and tie on: minutes later his jacket was off and his bow tie askew, undress that spoke of high-class passion. Frank Sinatra took his encores his way, his bow tie undone in languid indication of well-dressed masculinity.

This year's Oscars were distressing precisely because there were so few ties to undo. There is no time, sir," Jeeves once intoned to Bertie Wooster, "when a tie does not matter." What that wondrous Desert Island valet would have made of sloppy Steven Spielberg, or Robin Williams, or even Jeremy Irons (who should have known better) is a question we feel bound to ask. Jeeves would surely have shuddered - as he would, almost certainly, at Braveheart or Leaving Las Vegas - and handed in his resignation. What good are those darn Oscars, we ask, without the "full fig"?

Responsible advice and choice of the consumer on BSE

From Sir Simon Gourlay

Sir, Over the last few days ministers have stated time and again that the Government has consistently acted on the basis of the best scientific advice available on BSE and have denied any charge that they or their predecessors have ever dragged their feet in implementing measures recommended by that advice. They seem painfully unaware that the manner of government statements over the last ten years is itself largely responsible for today's acute loss of credibility in almost anything they may say about BSE. Ministers have failed to take account of the fact that scientific knowledge on encephalopathy is not, and for a very long time cannot be, definitive. If you make pronouncements based on the science of the day which read as though east in tablets of stone, you look flat footed when the frontiers of knowledge move on. Do it often enough and you run out of credibility: especially when government, on its own subsequent admission, was responsible in the first place for the BSE disaster by lowering the standards for treatment of offals in animal feeds.

As you rightly point out in your leader today, it is sometimes essential to go beyond the science of the day to retain consumer confidence. The National Farmers Union recommended to MAFF certain measures in 1990, which were rejected at the time, nearly all of which have since been implemented. Ministerial fury directed at the EU veterinary committee's decision to ban all export of British beef will get us precisely nowhere.

We have got to move fast and well beyond the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's analysis if we are to save a great tranche of our beef industry - including the vitally important processing sector - from annihilation. To remove cattle born before 1991 from the food chain at the end of their productive life would be neither logistically difficult nor ruinously expensive.

There is another crucial element in restoring consumer confidence. In your leader on Monday you suggested that "food scares can be better handled in future only by a clearer divi-sion of responsibility". You should be more forthright and more explicit. As we wait for the further events of this week to reveal the extent of the collapse in the British beef industry and who may be going to pick up the tab, let us begin a vigorous campaign for a food and drug agency, totally independent of any government depart-

Standards at the bench From Mr Francis C. Palmer, JP

Sir, In 1985 one of the magistrates on my bench received a letter from the Lord Chancellor's office criticising her severely for being guilty of driving at 45mph in a built-up area. There was a subtle hint of resignation. She was a most conscientious magistrate and a credit to the bench. As chairman, whilst not condoning her offence, I wrote to the Lord Chancellor's office expressing concern at such treatment.

I suggested that it would be more appropriate to deal severely with some of the recent appointees who were not measuring up to the standards required, giving evidence to support my views. The Lord Chancelfor's office replied by informing me that "it is Advisory Committees that [the Lord Chancellor] looks to for recommendations for appointment to bench should think he had a right to be a member or to attend meetings of that committee. On Panorama last night an anonymous interviewee proudly proclaimed he had been a magistrate for ten years, had been growing and smoking cannabis for twenty, and tried to influence his colleagues to take a lenient view when dealing with drug offences. So self-confessed criminals are being appointed to the bench. This appears to support my complaint of ten years ago that standards were being lowered in favour of a greater "spread" of appointees. And the system of appointing advisory committee members might also be reviewed.

Caught speeding

From Mr Graham Allen, MP for Nottingham North (Labour)

Sir, I was saddened to read your report, "183 drivers are caught speeding in one hour" (later editions. March 19; letter, March 23). The fact that so many cars on this stretch of road were breaking the law reflects the culture of speeding that has developed over the ast twenty years. Behaviour such as this cannot simply be eradicated overnight, but the Government has consistently failed to implement any meas-ures that tackle the problem at its

Speeding is now the cause of nearly one-third of road deaths. Yet the Government's approach to reducing fatalities among pedestrians and cyclists is to warn them of road dangers rather than attempting to improve driving standards. Speed cameras are a valuable weapon in the fight against speeding, yet they must be part of an overall transport strategy, with education beginning in schools about how to use roads safely, whether on foot or

There must be stricter enforcement penalties. The motorists caught in Kent will probably consider them-selves unlucky and keep their eyes peeled for speed cameras in future rather than reduce their speed.

Speeding is potentially as dangerous as drink-driving. We can no longer treat it as socially acceptable behav-

From Councillor Malcolm Hyland

Sir, I believe there is another side to Peter Riddell's excellent article, "Economic insecurity remains the Tories' bugbear" (March 26). That is the false confidence of the Seventies and Eighties with which we compare our pre-sent conditions. These periods of high inflation and wage settlements and costly work practices have contributed directly, together with the relentless march of new technology, to the present levels of unemployment and today's insecurity.

This country has gone through a painful readjustment but it now has a sound economic foundation on which to build and bring with it lasting and well founded confidence. We should all adjust to these new realities and not hark back to the false security of vestervear.

Yours faithfully. MALCOLM HYLAND (Councillor, Shortlands Ward. Bromley). 13 Linden Grove, Sydenham, SE26.

From Mr Stephen Morris

Sir, Mr Howard Grace (letter, March 20) rightly believes religious education in schools is "diverse". The reason is that many RE specialists fear reli-gions as living faiths and prefer to reduce them to sociological phenomena. which may interest but not influence their pupils

The major role for religious education is to import more than information - the challenge, the spirit and the reality of faiths.

STEPHEN MORRIS (Head of Religious Education). Beverley Grammar School, Queensgate, Beverley, East Yorkshire. March 20.

Climbers' concern for Cairn Gorm

From Sir Chris Bonington and others Sir, We write as the current president and former presidents of the Alpine Club to draw attention to the proposal, conditionally approved by the Highland Regional Council, to build a funicular railway to the summit of Cairn Gorm, Scotland's fourth highest mountain, together with a large visitor centre and facilities on the summit plateau itself. We recognise the understandable concerns of the local communities to forward development in this area of the Highlands. But this proposal would do irreversible damage to one of Europe's most important wild areas, both in landscape and natureconservation terms.

If the Government's commitment to the environment and to sustainable development is to mean anything, the need for sensitivity in the development of this fragile area must surely lie at the top of its priorities, not least because the Cairngorms are generally recognised as being of World Heritage site quality. We ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to intervene and set in train a strategic analysis of the development needs of the whole Glenmore corridor, consistent with the preservation of this unique environment. We believe there are solutions which are consistent with the Government's commitment to sustainable develop-

We believe that all mountaineers and conservationists would enthusiastically co-operate in a statesmanlike approach such as this.

From Mr Ernest Carr

Sir, On March 13 you published a letter of mine on a proposal to build a restaurant, shop and hostel, with a large car and coach park, in Glen Brittle on the Isle of Skye, on an unspoilt site of great natural beauty.

All those who were concerned about the damage that this would have caused will be glad to know that the Highland Regional Council has now informed the 150 objectors that the developers have withdrawn their planning application.

Yours faithfully, ERNEST CARR, 17 Bertram Road, Liverpool. March 23.

From Dr N. D. Barnes

Sir. Psychological profiling for all gun licence applicants (News in brief March 25)? We underestimate the contribution of Joseph Heller on such matters. There need be no restriction on applying for a licence for any handgun. It is evident that making such an application indicates unsuitability and should be refused.

Yours faithfully, NICK BARNES. Rhee House, Church Street, Harston, Cambridgeshire. March 25.

From Mr D. J. Kiernan

Sir, With the recent announcement that consumption of alcohol (in moderate quantities) can reduce the risk of heart disease (report, March 22) it is surely now time for the Government to remove the tax from this health-giving product.

Yours faithfully, D. J. KIERNAN, 1 Mayday Cottages, Bury Road, Brandon, Suffolk.

In the chair From Mr T. M. H. Scott

Sir. The answer to the question posed by Lord Esher (letter, March 23) is that the Scots convenor in almost every case has not actually convened the meeting. The word is, therefore, even more silly than chair or chairper-

OBITUARIES

Senator Edmund Muskie, US Secretary of State, 1980-81, and Senator from Maine, 1959-80, died yesterday aged 81. He was born on March 28, 1914,

IT WAS Ed Muskie's misfortune to be most widely remembered for an incident that really counted for very little, given the general range of his career. In March 1972, while campaigning for the Democratic nominanon in New Hampshire, he broke down in tears while referring to scandalous stories that had surfaced about his wife's alleged drinking.

The vision of a supposedly strong man weeping was sufficient to wreck his hopes of securing his party's nomination — just the result the Nixon White House "dirty tricks" department had counted on in planting the stories in the first place. But, in reality. Muskie had lost little. Richard Nixon never needed Watergate or any of its associated activities in order to win that election. By getting knocked out of the contest long before even his party's own convention Muskie simply saved himself the martyr's crown that eventually landed on the brow of George McGovern who, in November 1972, went down to one of the most ignominious defeats in the history of American politics.

Ed Muskie first emerged as a major figure in US politics as Hubert Humphrey's vice-presidential candidate in 1968. That, too, was hardly an enviable inheritance. After the confusion, chaos and internecine fighting which disfigured that year's Chicago convention — and the awkward, ambivalent relationship of the party's standard-bearer to the outgoing President. Lyndon Johnson — no one gave much for the Democratic ticket's chances.

But in the campaign Muskie succeeded in making a perceptible personal hit. He dominated the radical student crowds, while also impressing the average American voter with his calm, his immense height, his honesty and his carefully publicised Polish origins. His freedom from the vulgarity which American commentators detected in the other political candidates (including his own running-mate) made him the clear favourite of the American press. The only curious aspect was that anyone should have been surprised at such an outcome. His record as a vote-winner was, after all, there for all to see. Single-handed he had captured and held the traditionally Republican state of Maine - As Maine goes, so goes Vermont" was the wag's joke at the time of the Roosevelt 1936 landslide - in the Democratic column, first as Governor in 1954, then as Senator four years later. His rise in the Senate had been as steady, as unflashy and as solidly based as his rise in Maine

In the confusion which followed Richard Nixon's narrow victory in the 1968 election he thus seemed the natural candidate for the Democratic nomination in 1972. For some time that appearance was borne out by the opinion polls which made him by far the strongest figure among the potential Democratic candidates, excepting only Senator Edward

But, even before his crying in the snow, actual experience on the hustings had revealed how unreliable such polls can be. He proved both physically and temperamentally unsuited to the constant public exposure of the campaign. His initial successes were distinctly underwhelming - and long before (as he always claimed) the snowflakes got into his eyes in New Hampshire, he must have privately recognised that he was not cast by nature for the role of heading a national ticket.

It was probably, indeed, his rueful acknowledgement of this defect in his make-up as a politician which caused him barely to hesitate when in April 1980 he was offered an alternative opportunity of executive service by becoming President Carter's Secretary of State. Again, however, the circumstances were hardly propitious. His predecessor at the State Department, Cyrus Vance, had just resigned in protest against the failure of the White House to consult him over the ill-fated desert raid (designed to rescue the US Iranian hostages); and, although Muskie asked for, and got, assurances that he would be allowed to be his own man - and not a just a front-of-house manager for Carter's National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski he must have foreseen that the chances were that he would play only

The only thing, in fact, that could have made sense of the appointment competence. Even though he eventu-ally became chairman of the Senate - and, indeed, justified the sacrifice of Muskie's Senate seat (which went to his former executive assistant. George Mitchell) - would have been if Jimmy Carter had gone on to secure a second term. But this was not something that was under Carter's control, still less Muskie's. If anyone, indeed, was calling the shots, it was Ayatollah Khomeini in Tehran who eventually decided to release the 52 American hostages on the very day Ronald Reagan was inaugurated (and only after he had taken the oath, programme secured a 53-22 majority while Muskie still sat vainly waiting in the Senate for a measure all had for news in the State Department). assumed certain to be defeated.

> Democratic nomination. But he was never perhaps quite the straightforward character that even his backers took him to be. His personality was as complex as its political manifestations were simple. Beneath the courtesy and gentleness, for which he was famous, lurked a legendary volcanic temper. He drove his staff as hard as he drove himself. He was ill-at-ease with small-talk, absorbed by big issues and bored by frivolous, fussy details. He believed in frankness even when it might damage his cause, as in his famous rejection of the notion of having a black candidate for the vice-presidency, or in his comments on the failure of American liberalism to achieve any fundamental changes in Ameri-

Budget Committee, he made his greatest impact as chairman of the Air and Water Pollution sub-committee long before ecology became the fad of Left and Centre alike, carning the nickname of "Mr Clean". In 1965 he wrote the Water Quality Act, establishing the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration, and in 1967 he drafted legislation establishing regional clean air standards. His biggest success came in 1966 when his speech on the model cities

In general his voting record managed to secure the wholehearted approval of the traditional liberal organisations, Americans for Democratic Action and the AFL/ClO Committee on Political Education, while his cautious ruminative personality, his professional competence and his care for the interests of Maine industry maintained for him the support and respect of Middle America. There he was always recognised as a man who lived and worked by the ideals of honesty, hard work and independence, traditional to small-town society in America. It was the increasing public recognition of these qualities, highlighted by his deliberate rebuke of President Nixon's attempt in the 1970 mid-term elections to link his Democratic opponents with the radical lunatic fringe, which made him, however briefly, the 1972 front-runner for the can society since the New Deal.

In 1948 he married Jane F. Gray She survives him, together with their two sons and three daughters.

JOHN PAFFORD

John Pafford, Goldsmiths' Librarian of the University of London, 1945-67, died on March Il aged 96. He was born in Bradford-on-Avon on March 6, 1900.

LIBRARIANS, particularly university librarians, have for decades had to tackle the problem of organising collections for research in the face of vastly increased numbers of publications and students, Jack Pafford became embroiled in this logistical problem early on in his career and, despite showing an aptitude for academic scholarship, remained at the forefront of the science of librarianship throughout his long life.

It could be said of him, as Pafford wrote of H. S. Foxwell who had collected the Goldsmiths' Library of Economic Literature in the late 19th century - that he cared for books "as things", and loved handling them: but much more than this, he was deeply concerned with cataloguing and arranging his library."

Born with the century, John Henry Pyle Pafford was educated at Trowbridge High School, where he shone as both scholar and sportsman. He enlisted in 1918 in the Inns of Court OTC, and was commissioned into The Wiltshire Regiment, but because of his poor hearing he was never sent to the trenches.

On demobilisation, he began his long association with the University of London and University College. Reading English under W. P. Ker and R.W. Chambers, he repaid his debt to both by his later bibliography of Ker and his work on the Arden edition of The Winter's Tale, for which he was awarded a doctorate.

He turned aside from his first choice of an academic literary career and, after an assistantship in University College Library, became Librarian and tutor at Selly Oak Colleges in Birmingham. The award of a travelling scholarship to Europe enabled him to begin his series of investigations into librarianship abroad, an experience which led to his lasting commitment to inter-library co-operation -then still a struggling infant in most countries. Library Cooperation in Europe (1935), a dense but eminently useful book for librarians, emerged from his wanderings. In 1931 he was made sub-librarian at the National Central Library in London.

During the Second World War, Pafford was again denied active service because of his hearing. But he played an important role in setting up Army libraries and in the Army Education Scheme described in his pamphlet, Books and Army Education (1946).

Appointed Goldsmiths' Librarian in the University of London in 1945, Pafford set about re-establishing the library on its return from evacuation. Under his direction it became one of the finest in a university with many fine collections. Pafford planned the published catalogue of the great Goldsmiths' Library of Economic Literature, and contributed the historical introduction to the first volume.

The many other special collections added during his librarianship are recorded in the tribute presented to him by the library staff on his 90th birthday. He brought in Sir Louis Sterling's remarkable collection of first editions with a grant to build appropriate accommodation, and persuaded individuals and societies to donate whole libraries, notably those for music, maps, and London.

He encouraged subject specialisation among the staff. with similar book groupings. The Open Lending Library, and the Depository Library at Egham were among results of his visit in 1947 to America and Canada. His use of the Bibliographic Classification of H. E. Bliss was a pioneering example to university

His appointment as library adviser to the Inter-Universities Council on Higher Education Overseas gave him the chance not only to give guidance to many new universities and their librarians, but also to add to the growing strengths of the University of London Library in the literature and history of other countries, notably of the Americas. The Elliot-Phelips library of Latin Americana, and the gift of the American Library from the United States Information Service. have been enhanced by the requent acquisition of the library of the Canadian High Commission.

To his staff Pafford was approachable, compassionate, often humorous: among friends and colleagues he inspired affection and admiration, and his advice. diffidently proffered, was never sought in vain. Despite working in London most of his professional life, he remained recognisably a Wiltshire man, never losing his native burr. and contributing on occasion nuggets of history to local magazines, from Spas and mineral waters to A medieval horseshoe and Hare shooting with a .22. In 1993, at the age of 93. he completed his last book. John Clavell. 1601-43: highwayman, author, lawyer, doctor.

In 1941 he married his wife Betty. She survives him, together with one of their two daughters.

John Snagge, OBE. broadcaster, died on March 25 aged 91. He was born on May 8, 1904.

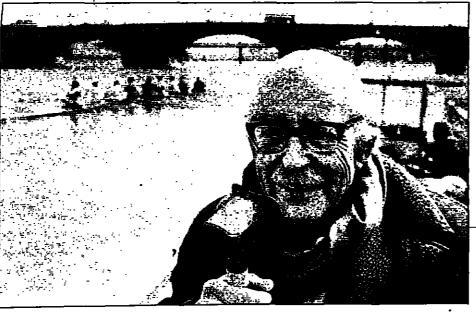

JOHN SNAGGE was one of the best-known of those announcers and commentators who rose to prominence on BBC radio before and during the Second World War. At the time of his retirement in 1965 his voice - not least through the Varsity Boat Race and his much imitated intonation of "In...out...in...out" had been a familiar one to listeners for nearly forty years. He was Director of Presenta-ready investing this role with a formality that was to become part of the BBC legend. Snagge, a stalwart man of strong presence, fell without affectation within the conventions of the time - including the wearing of a dinner jacket for evening bulletins. His individuality lay in a certain robust directness in addressing the microphone, of which Reith may not at first altogether have approved. Nevertheless, allied to a ready mind and an appetite for technicalities, it added to his authority for the big occasion. He was also at home in

He had become deputy head of Outside Broadcasting before, in 1939, he was promoted Director of Presentation, at a moment when the reliability of the BBC programme schedules, taken for granted in peace, was about to become a buttress of national morale in war. Snagge and his staff bore a large share of responsibility for continuity in the studio; as they did also for coping with wartime hazards, including those of instant improvisation under air attack. In those days, with the nation's very existence threatened, the voices of the

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA

M Gyo's programme for 1865 is extremely inviting. The details in full having already been published in our advertising columns, a very lew comments may suffice before the opening of the theatre, which is announced to take place tomorrow with Faust e Margherita. Mr Gyo dwells with accountable emphasis on the fact that the late Meyerbeur's eagerly expected grand opera. [Africaine will now at length be brought out at his establishment. Meyerbeur's predilection for the work, and his anxiety about the means to be obtained for its adequate performance, are generally known; and, indeed, it is the belief of many that his exercions in that direction, during his last visit to Paris, aggravated the malady which had been his enemy for many years and eventually hastened his death . . . Happily there is one of scarcely less promise. We allude to the revival of Mozart's Il Flauto Magico, after a repose of 14 years. About the "cast" of the Africaine — which includes the names of Mdlle. Paulino Lucca, Madame Carvalho, Horren Wachtel and Schmid, Signori Graziani, Neri Baraldi. and Attri - we can of course offer no opinion. being unacquainted with the peculiar exi-gencies of the music; but for the effective distribution of characters in Mozart's imaginative work we think we may safely vouch . . The Sarastro of Herr Schmid a Teuton pur sung, with a magnificent bass - may fairly be expected to rival that of Herr Formes: while Herr Wachtel - another Teuton pur sang ought to be intimately versed in the traditions of Pamino . . . We shall love, it is true, the "O care imagine" of Signor Mario; but in revenge we are promised that the still most graceful, dramatic, and eloquent of stage tenors will undertake the part of Era Diavolo, in the Italian version of that most genial and delightful of French comic operas . . . But there is still a fourth in contemplation - nay, actually promised. We mean the revival of the greatest of all comic operas Mozart's incom-parable Le Nozze di Figuro. Here again we find the distribution of the dramatis personae unusually efficient. Adolin's l'atti brings a new argument in vindication of her oft proved versatility in the assumption of Susanna; the more sentimental and stately embodiment for the Countess Almamira devolves upon Madame Oarvalho; Cherubino falls to Mdile. Lucca. Among other operas proposed is L'Étoile du Nord, with what cast we are unable to gather. Next comes Linda di Chamounix. Then, the not unfamiliar Norma will introduce to an English audience a soprano with whose praises the Continent has long been ringing, Maddle. Lagrua having seceded, it was incumbent on Mr. Gyo either to re-enage Madame Grisi, or to find another lyric tragodisu ... The Huguenots and Guillaume Tell are naturally announced. Lucrezia Borgia — with Mdlle. Galetti as Lucrezia, Mddle. do Ahna (from Berlin, another fresh acquisition) as Maffeo Orsini, and Signor Saccomanno (from Milan - yet another) as the Duke - follows in due course: but these with Un Ballo in Maschera, may speak for themselves. Le Prophète, however, is to be rendered freshly attractive by the appearance of Mddle. Fillipine de Edelsberg . . .

If it had been thought desirable to defer the obtaining and disclosure of expert evidence, that could probably have been agreed or a court order obtained. It was a valid objection to the interrogatories that they covered ground already covered in the pleadings and the medical reports and also the further and better particulars vhen delivered.

The advantage, referred to by the judge, of having all the answers on one piece of paper could not justify the time and expense necessarily involved in requiring the plaintiffs to depose to wers on affidavit, and there was no material before the court to justify a challenge, which had not been made, to their honesty. out that "premises" included "any place and it was submitted that Leicester Square, and any London street, could thus be described as premises. Mr Justice Dyson had agreed with the council.

Mr Spencer had accepted that Schedule 12 was not intended to make licenseable the activities of a Pied Piper who moved from place to place. It was, he said, confined to any area capable of demarcation".

But such a test was inappropriate in the context of applying criminal sanctions. Something more was required. Thus, Mr Spencer said, relying on Powell v Kempton Park Racecourse Co Ltd ([1899] AC 143, HL), a place was to be confined to an area which was regularly used by the applicant for his music However, neither that case nor others under the Shops Act 1950 were helpful in the instant exercise. The council accepted that the 1963 Act was not framed with buskers in mind. It clearly was not. Schedule 12 was concerned with the control of premises to which the public was invited for public

If there was a need for more controls than the council currently had then specific legislation should be passed giving those powers. Networking Infrastructure c £60,000 OTE plus car

Siemens Nixdorf Information Systems Ltd. is Europe's leading IT company. In the UK we have achieved outstanding success across a wide number of sectors and earned a reputation for providing innovative IT solutions.

Our IT Services business is highly successful, with revenues approaching £70 million. Our focus is totally on our customers, helping them to meet and maintain their business objectives by ensuring that they get the best possible service from their existing and future IT investments.

Key to any current and future corporate IT strategy is investment in networking. Our Network Systems Group focuses on helping major organisations with a top down approach to networking and cabling services. We design vendor-independent solutions based around leading products from organisations such as 3Com, Cabletron and Cisco. Not only are we able to supply network infrastructure, but our project management expertise allows us to implement and integrate complete business solutions for our customers. Of equal importance, we can utilise the resources of some 480 personnel within ITS to provide ongoing service and support, together with a full range of managed services through our Systems Management Centre.

It is against this background of comprehensive expertise that we are looking to expand our existing highly successful sales team. With a focus on new and existing large corporate accounts, you will be responsible for developing new infrastructure business with typical order values of £100K - £500K. Your background should include a successful track record of selling large networking solutions. In addition, you should understand the significance of integration and support services to major corporations.

Based from our UK headquarters in Bracknell, these positions offer the opportunity to make a significant impact within a highly successful business unit. We offer a competitive package including a high basic salary and fully expensed car, plus all the benefits associated with a

Woman's Hour has thrived for 50 years by maintaining a balance between radical feminism and unapologetic domesticity

n next Friday's Woman's Hour Jenni Murray, the main presenter for nine years, will pick up the Broadcast-ing Press Guild award for Radio Broadcaster of the Year. She wins not only for consistent intelligence. news sense, imagination and stamina - broadcasting live for four mornings a week - but also for the remarkable quality of her voice. In my long and unsuccessful efforts to sound less "backwoods Massachusetts". I have often thought that, born again, I would come back as Jenni Murray. The wheel has come full circle since 1946. Now, as then, there is no need to justify a programme dedicated to the female point of view. The separateness of the sexes, and the conflict between them, now seems to fill more newspaper and broadcasting space than politics and economics. No longer do you hear men sneering: "So why not a Man's Hour, then?" In today's media you from impotence to baldness.

Give truck drivers their hour back So Woman's Hour's agenda is feminist-combative for those who clear: the topical and the timeless, would prefer every woman to be the public and the personal. Mon-day's interview with Susan pruning roses waiting for the breadwinner to come home. It was Sarandon about the political uses ever thus. Since the beginning the programme today, suggests Paul Donovan, radio critic of The domestic. Its survival is proof of its successful balance — abortion Sunday Times, "you wouldn't call it Woman's Hour, would you?" No, you'd call it The Girlie Show, rights one minute. Agas the next. The shifting of Woman's Hour in 1991 from its traditional 2pm and you'd get the same result slot to 10.30am was a national trauma. Articles in the press and women saying what they don't say elsewhere and men tuning in to sacks of letters begged Michael hear it. But in 50 years from now, Channel 4 will not be celebrating Green, then Controller of Radio 4, not to do it. He did it anyway, for The Girlie Show. While Woman's doctrinal reasons. Radio 4 mid-Hour may recognise shoplifting as morning audiences showed a sag a women's problem, it will not tell and a lively, topical magazine programme seemed the way to lift Woman's Hour has a lot of programme has been lambasted

as impossibly radical or laughably

So it has done, but not by very much. The daily audience is modestly bigger at 600,000 (instead of 500,000). And, yes, more men are listening - but not very many more. The sex ratio in 1991 was 70-30, now it is 65-35.

What better way to celebrate the golden anniversary than by admitting that these gains are paltry and by moving the programme back to its original time slot? Oh, but it would lose the new audience. Oh programme, The Trade Rag, last week: "A great tragedy for British working truck drivers was when Woman's Hour was altered to 10.30 in the morning. That's no use to anyone. In the morning, you're getting in and out of the cab, delivering the goods ... In the afternoon we're running back, and there's a chance to relax and listen to Woman's Hour."

The original justification for the time slot was that 2pm was the one hour of the day that a 1946 housewife could call her own - the dishes and cleaning done, the baby put down for a nap and the older children not yet home from school.

That reasoning, with appropriate modifications, still holds. Jenni Murray (although not complaining about having to get up early) fears that, by going out in the morning, the programme now may not be reaching an important constituency - women who work part-time. Many of these get home just after lunch and have an hour

thers too. Woman's Hour's natural time is still the early afternoon if only because one of the few stable things in a changing society is the closing time of the school day.

liftieth anniversaries abound this year as the BBC celebrates its postwar innova-tions, including Alistair Cooke's Letter from America and the Third Programme. Its Russian Service is a third. On Monday night, coming straight to its celebration party from the Campaign for Freedom of Information's award ceremony for those who have fought against the British habit of official secrecy, I was refreshed to hear a reminder of government doing something in favour of openness.

In 1946 Sir Ivone Kirkpatrick, head of information at the Foreign Office, launched the service in the hope it would broadcast into the Soviet Union "the true proportion both of favourable and unfavourable opinion". This sense of proportion, and the Foreign Office's trust in the BBC to deliver it, saved into "Cold War Radio", as its American counterparts did. Perhaps the FO should get a freedom of information award.

And finally, all the excitement about the V-chip has invested it with magical powers to bleep out the offensive words and scenes of a parent's choosing. Nothing like. The V-chip, as about to be introduced in Canada and the United States, blocks out whole programmes, not just the naughty bits. What it should really be called is a ratings system, but there are no headlines in that.

A very public divorce

Did South Africa feast too richly on the Mandela split, asks

Ray Kennedy

The South African Divorce Act, as amended in 1979, is perfectly explicit: it is illegal to publish any particulars of an action other than the names of the parties and the judgment or order of the court. In the case of President Nelson Mandela and his former wife, Winnie Mdikizela-Mandela, as she now wishes to be known, the media reported every salacious detail of bedroom snubs, adultery and alleged wifely extravagance.

Since then there has been a collective beating of editorial breasts over whether or not, in a case involving two prominent public figures, there was justification to ignore the law. Mi Justice Eloff, who heard the case and is also Judge President of Transvaal, did not raise objections at the hearing in Johannesburg, although he had ample opportunity to do

A member of Mr Mandela's legal team said: "No one from our side raised any objection. The publicity would have done him more harm if the trial [sic] was held in secret."

The central issue is whether the restrictions imposed by the Divorce Act are unconstitutional in South Africa's postapartheid climate and in the light of the Government's support for press freedom and freedom of expression enshrined in a Bill of Rights.

Professor Dennis Davies, a the University of Witwatersrand, found it "unbelievable" that the restrictions were breached so brazenly. "Being President gives you a reduced right to privacy, but it can't possibly destroy your privacy completely," Professor Davies said. "He might be the most famous person in the world, but he is not public property." But Raymond Louw, former Editor of the Rand Daily Mail, until its demise in the early 1980s an opponent of apartheid, thought it was a risk that went with the job. Mr Louw, now chairman of the Freedom of Expression Institute, a constitutional lobbying constitutional law specialist at -body, was part of a delegation that approached the Government in 1979, when the Divorce Act amendments were enacted, to protest that they were being introduced to hide potentially important information from the public. Mr Louw said: "I feel sympathy for the President that his private life has to be bandied about in public... but this is the price one pays for democracy.

The scrutiny of public figures in South Africa has been turned on its head by a ruling in the Constitutional Court last month in which Mr Justice Cameron overturned an Appeal Court judgment against a newspaper for defamation. General Bantu Holomisa, a junior minister, was alleged to have been involved in infiltrating armed men into northern KwaZulu/ Natal "to kill whites" in 1994 when he ruled the former Transkei homeland.

Judge Cameron said a successful democracy depended on "robust criticism of the exercise of power", which required alert citizens as well as an independent media. Anyone who sought to inhibit political speech by suing for defamation should have to prove that the media had forfeited entitlement to constitutional protection" even if the published information turned out to be false.

new benchmark for litigation by public figures learning toprinciple in the United States that a democracy cannot flourish unless its citizens are free to criticise officials. He said the judgment was based on a legal system that "did not treasure at its core a democratic system". The country's new values of legal order depended on "vigorous mechanisms of public scrutiny and public debate, not only to nurture the new structures but to guard against excesses in their exercise".

After it came to power in May 1994, pledging transparent government, the African National Congress enjoyed a long honeymoon with a South African press that had endured and in some cases vig-orously opposed decades of legislated censorship and hostility under the apartheid regime. Up to 100 laws inhib-

His ruling effectively set a iting access to information and freedom to publish were enacted, culminating in the naproclaimed in 1986, which carried threats of fines of up to 20,000 rand (about £3,300) or ten years in jail for contravening media restrictions.

But many of the ANC's office bearers, during years of exile in dictatorial African states or behind the Iron Curtain, have had experience of societies where freedom of expression was severely limited. They are increasingly sensitive to criticism as media attention turns to issues such as the Government's housing record - far behind the promised one million new homes in five years - the severe crime wave and the extravagance of some of the new elite.

There are also concerns about the media's ownership structure, which President Mandela has noted is "not only concentrated in a few hands but reflects the patterns of racial exclusion characteristic of the apartheid era". Many of the apartheid-era laws restricting press freedom and access to information remain on the statute book, although they are now almost totally ignored. Mr Louw suspects that the Government wants to retain them. But he concedes that, while editorship is still a legal minefield, the bombs go off less often.

Alan Mitchell looks at a new way of buying our food

SAINSBURY'S is planning to revolu-tionise the way people shop by delivering groceries straight to customers' homes. The country's secondbiggest supermarket chain is negotiating with Supermarket Direct, a Londonbased home shopping firm, to co-brand its operation as a Sainsbury-endorsed service. The venture has been operating in the Wimbledon, Putney, Fulham and Clapham areas of south London since last October. The plan is for nationwide expansion, and a stock market flotation in two to three years' time. Dominic Scott-Flanagan, a director, says: "We believe that once consumers have shopped with us they will never want to visit a busy supermarket again."

Home delivery of items from pizzas to personal computers is burgeoning as consumers seek added convenience. But the delivery of the weekly food shop has been dismissed as a non-starter. Taking orders over the phone. processing them and organising temperature-controlled deliveries is expensive. Richard Chadwick, Sainsbury's business development director, says: "There will always be people who want to come in, or who won't trust homedelivery for perishables."

Now the tide is turning as small London ventures such as Supermarket Direct and Food Ferry prove that enough consumers are prepared to nav an extra £5 or so to avoid the weekly supermarket pilgrimage. Jonathan Hartnell-Beavis, a Food Ferry director says: "Food Ferry is growing at 30 per cent a year. There is huge public demand, and it is going to keep growing as our cities become more crowded." Mr Chadwick says Sainsbury's long-term estimate is that home delivery will gain 5 to 10 per cent of the UK's £80 billion food market.

Now, having spent billions of pounds building superstores over the past decade, the grocery chains' viability rests on their ability to maintain their magnetism. Even a loss of 5 per cent - Sainsbury's lower estimate for the market - could transform superstores into white elephants. Early adopters of home

with children, families prepared to pay big margins on expensive food and drink for the privilege of having it delivered to their door. These people are so profitable that a superstore with 20,000 regular customers faces losing 10 per cent of its total profits if

That has been the experience in America, where Peapod, the leader in the home-shopping field, counts 60 per cent of its customers as dual-income families with children. The big shift, however, will take place only when "door-drop density" reaches a point where it actually becomes cheaper to deliver direct to the home.

The supermarkets have an interest in delaying that day as long as possible. While Sainsbury's ponders closer links with Supermarket Direct, it has no financial links with the firm. Tesco has started delivering the weekly shop to clients of Ealing social services, and has a long-standing direct-delivery service for wine, flowers and hampers. But what both companies are really looking for are ways that keep shoppers coming to their stores.

One alternative to home delivery is office delivery. Another is petrol station delivery: have your weekly staples loaded into your car while filling up at your supermarket petrol station. Or else have your order for regular items such as potatoes, milk, butter, baked beans and petfood prepacked and waiting for you at the store. Then spend a shorter but more enjoyable shopping time choosing the more exciting items. Marks & Spencer is experimenting with a different twist: allow people to choose and pay for their goods during their lunch hours and have them delivered to their homes later that day, for a fee of £5. As their most profitable consumers may desert them, the big retail chains will have no choice, says Mr Scott-Flanagan, but to offer home delivery. Meanwhile, Kevin Duffill, operations director at Andersen Consulting's Smart Store project, says they will do their best to provide more reasons to go to supermarkets.

THE TIMES Take two children FREE to a Tussauds attraction

The Times, in association with Tussauds Group, offers readers a chance to take two children, in April (excluding Easter 5-8 inclusive) and May, free to any of Tussauds' eight attractions saving up to £26.

Full details appeared in Saturday's Times, but the following are the attractions you can enjoy, with the amount you would save off the price of tickets for two children in brackets: Chessington World of Adventures (save E26): Alton Towers (save £26): Madame Tussaud's (save £11.50): The London Planetarium (save £7.20); Warwick Castle (save £10.50); Rock Circus (save £11.90); Port Aventura, Spain (save £32);

Madame Tussaud Scenerama, Holland (save £12). Although you cannot take the children to one of these exciting attractions at Easter, there are other bank holidays, in May, when you can take advantage of this offer.

HOW TO APPLY

You need to attach four differently numbered tokens from The Times (no photocopies will be accepted) to a completed entry form which appeared on Saturday and in yesterday's paper. More tokens will be published daily until next next Saturday, March 30, 1996. Present them at the ticket office of the attraction you visit.

You are entitled to up to two free child entries per party when paying one full adult admission. The entry form plus tokens can only be used for one visit to any one attraction, subject to availability. This offer excludes the Easter weekend and cannot be used in conjunction with

The sale, which represents the most important single component of rail privatisation, will transfer ownership of 10,000 route miles of track. 40,000 tunnels, viaducts and bridges and 2,500 stations to the private sector. The flotation will take place in the first

Sir George Young, the Transport Secretary, said: "With the share shop network in place and with registration now under way, we are confident the broad structure of the offer which we have outlined today will help attract a strong level of interest from retail investors across the country." Brian Wilson, Labour's railway spokesman, said: "Investors should understand that this is a high-risk bet in every sense of that term."

P&O to raise £lbn via sales

By CARL MORTISHED

P&O, the shipping, construction and property group, plans to raise up to £1 billion over the next three years. P&O plans to float Bovis Homes, the housebuilding division, next year and £500 million will be shed from the group's huge investment property portfolio before the end of 1998. Further funds are expected to be released from P&O's bulk shipping business. The surprise disposals announcement came as P&O revealed a fall in pre-tax profits from £349 million to £320 million including a sharp decline in profits from P&O Containers and the cross-channel ferries business which is suffering from the impact of Eurotunnel. The dividend is held at 30.5p for the year.

Lord Sterling, P&O's chairman, yesterday said the company should be able to meet all its capital expenditure needs and pay an increasing dividend from its businesses. To achieve that, he said the return on capital would have to be raised from last year's level of Il per cent. "We want a return on capital employed across our operating divisions in excess of 15 per cent," he said.

Lord Sterling said the aim was to raise the return over three years and businesses unable to reach the target would be shed. He said that consolidation in the container shipping market would help P&O. but added: "The return from containers is totally inadequate. If we cannot see a way to get an acceptable return, it will leave the group," he said. P&O is expected to ask the Government for release from undertakings not to collaborate with competitors on cross Channel ferry routes. Lord Sterling said there was no longer justification for them with Eurotunnel controlling half of the market. Profits at P&O Ferries fell from £114 million to £75 million in 1995.

Halifax plans big giveaway

HALIFAX, the UK's largest building society, yesterday confirmed that it is on course to become one of the country's top 20 companies with a valuation of about £10 billion when it makes its stock market debut in the summer of 1997. About nine million qualifying savers and borrowers can now expect to receive an average of at least £600 worth of free shares. The special general meeting for members to approve the conversion to banking status should take place next February. Mike Blackburn, chief executive of the Halifax, which yesterday reported a 13 per cent rise in annual profits to El.1 billion, said: We will have the largest shareholder register in the UK and this is possibly the biggest giveaway

in terms of value in the history of the world." Mr Blackburn said that over the next couple of years the Halifax, which has a 19 per cent share of the UK mortgage market on net lending of £2.9 billion, would seek to increase the group's income from nonannouncement of the society's proposed £800 million takeover of Clerical Medical, the insurer, was part of a strategy to increase market share in pensions, new life and unit trust business and possibly long-term health care policies.

Administrative expenses rose to £968.9 million from £780.6 million in 1994, reflecting the enlarged group after the merger with the Leeds Permanent Building Society last August. A further Ell2 million was set aside as an exceptional item.

Mr Blackburn now believes that the 1996 Halifax housing market forecast for house prices to rise 2 per cent and transactions 10 per cent may be on the conservative side.

MPs say jobless data is inadequate

BY PHILLP BASSETT, INDUSTRIAL EDITOR

THE monthly unemployment figures are a "completely inadequate" measure of the number of people out of work, an all-party committee of MPs said yesterday as it called on ministers to publish a much wider range of job figures.

Ministers are studying Central Statistical Office proposals to add a survey-based measure of unemployment to its monthly count of people out of work and claiming benefit, and the Commons Employment Select Committee yesterday said that a monthly survey would improve the current method.

The Barclays bought the Ritz last October from Trafalgar House for E75 million. The 90-year-old property has 130 bedrooms, making it relatively small by five-star hotel standards, but has planning permission for 23 extra rooms. With little space left in the Ritz, the Barciays have been looking for a neighbouring property.

The William Kent house, whose address is 22 Arlington Street, was designed by William Kent, a pioneer in Neo-Palladianism and an instigator of the Gothic Revival, in 1740. It was occupied over the centuries by a succession of grandees, starting with Henry Pelham, was to become Prime Minister.

The house, which is best known for its salon, hung with crimson damask and consisting of mytho-logical figures, is considered one of the finest interiors in London.

Old-style names put demands to Lloyd's

By Sarah Bagnall

THE dwindling ranks of traditional names at Lloyd's of London are demanding a bill of rights to prevent discrimination and to give protection similar to that of shareholders in listed companies.

Names representatives fear that traditional names will be sidelined and disadvantaged by actions of managing agents in the future. That is assuming that names accept a £2.8 billion settlement package.

The Association of Lloyds' Members and the High Premium Group, influential bodies. have drawn up a bill of rights that is to be put to the insurance market's regulatory board. The sixpoint bill has been compiled with the support of two leading members agencies. Willis Faber & Dumas and Christie Brockbank Shipton.

Christie's managing director. Charles Harbord-Hamond, said: "This is the first real test of the new regulatory regime to see wether the interests of names are protected rather than the preferences of the manag-

The names are concerned that some managing agents are able to benefit from insider knowledge. The names' bill of rights also demands that mergers of a syndicate require approval by a majority of names and that managing agents should no longer be allowed to reject, for no reason, a name's request to join a syndicate. Names want to ensure they have equal rights to subscribe for syndicate vacancies. If their demands are not met, the names plan to introduce a resolution at Lloyd's annual meeting. on July 15.

UK economy grew 2.5% during 1995

By Janet Bush, economics correspondent

THE British economy grew by 2.5 per cent last year, slightly less than 2.6 per cent previously estimated, while the current account deficit widened by far more than expected, largely due to record payments to the European Union, according to figures released by the Central Statistical Office.

Growth in gross domestic product was left unchanged from the most recent estimate at 0.5 per cent but there were revisions to the past year's data. Most notable of these was news that investment, far from rising 1.2 per cent, actually fell 0.7 per cent in 1995.

More surprising still is the fact that the savings ratio has risen in the last two quarters. The CSO had previously estimated that the savings ratio had fallen sharply in the third quarter to 8.6 from the 9.5 level recorded in the second and 10.1 in the first quarter of 1995. But the updated figures showed the savings ratio rose to 10.4 in the third quarter and to 10.5 in the fourth.

This suggests that, far from becoming more confident. consumers were, if anything, becoming more cautious as last year wore on. Yesterday's figures also contained downward revisions to consumer spending last year. Taking the fourth quarter 1995 against a year earlier, the latest estimate shows spending up 2.2 per cent against 2.5 per cent previously reported.

Consumer spending was up only 0.5 per cent in the final quarter. Jonathan Loynes of HSBC Markets said that the authorities will be hoping for much stronger consumer activity this year if they are to get anywhere near their 3 per cent growth forecast.

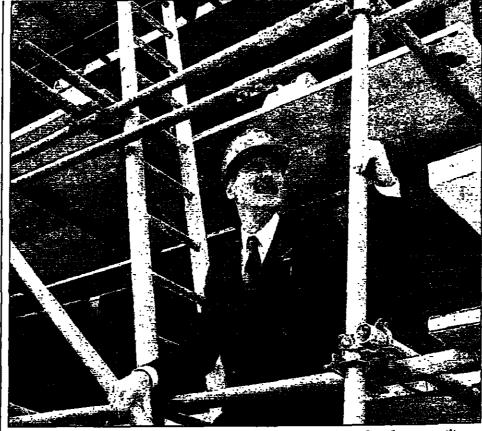

Other economists, however saw some potentially bullish news for spending in yesterday's figures with a rise of 1.2 per cent in total personal disposable income in the final quarter of the year. Economists argued that this bodes well for the coming year.

Downward revisions in consumer spending, investment and service sector output were partially offset by an upward revision in exports. Separate figures showed that the current account deficit widened sharply to £6.67 billion in 1995, more than three times the £2.08 billion recorded in 1994 but well below the £11 billion deficit in 1993.

During the fourth quarter. the current account gap was £1.8 billion compared with £2.1 billion in the third quarter and City expectations of a deficit of El billion. This was largely because of lower than expected invisible earnings which in turn came about because transfers to EU institutions hit a record of £2.5 billion in the fourth quarter.

Britain's visible trade was in deficit to the tune of £2.8 billion in the fourth quarter compared with £3.6 billion in the third quarter.

Michael Saunders, United Kingdom economist at Salomon Brothers, said that, as long as transfers to the EU fall back to more normal levels, he would expected a current account deficit this year of £3

Colin Parsons, Taylor Woodrow's chairman, plans quality rather than quantity

Taylor Woodrow lifts payout

BY CHRISTINE BUCKLEY

TAYLOR WOODROW, the construction and property group, underlined an optimism for the future with a 50 per cent increase in its final dividend. The company reported a drop in pretax profits from £50.8 million to £46 million, after a £8.5 million restructuring charge and reduced profits from Eurotunnel units. But it lifted the final dividend, payable on July I, to 2.25p from 1.5p, making a total of 3p.

Colin Parsons, chairman, said that the group's confidence sprung from wide exposure to overseas markets and the opportunity to reap rewards from its streamlining in the UK over the past year. In the UK, where the company emphasised that the need to restore construction to profitability is paramount, the company plans to sharpen its focus and bid only for projects carrying a substantial profit margin. Mr Parsons said: "We intend to go for quality rather than quantity.

There will also be a shake-up of the company's £450 million worth of property investment with much earmarked for disposal. The company remained subdued on the housing market, after the average price of its houses fell from £82,000 last year to £74,500.

Bankers driven to risk new crisis

By Patricia Tehan, banking correspondent

BANKERS fear they are being driven by intense competition to take unacceptable risks that will trigger the next banking crisis. According to comments made by 170 of the world's bankers, regulators and analysts, there is such high overcapacity that banks are under pressure to take risks to protect market share.

Orange shares ten times oversubscribed

THE initial public offering of shares in Orange, the third largest mobile phone operator, was ten times oversubscribed yesterday, meaning it will be sold this morning at the top end of the indicated price range. Orange said last month that the price per share would range from 175p to 205p, valuing the company between £2.2 billion and £2.45 billion.

Orange, is owned by Hutchison Whampoa of Hong Kong and British Aerospace. Early indications were that 30,000 investors had agreed to make the $1,000 minimum investment. If demand for the shares remains strong in the aftermarket, Goldman Sachs and Kleinwort Benson, the underwriters, are likely to exercise their option to sell some or all of their "over-allotment" of 49 million Orange shares next week

☐ Tracking the numbers, Labour allowing ☐ Red card for football shares ☐ Whence the next financial crisis?

☐ SOME time over the next few days, a couple of paragraphs of leaden prose will drop through the letterbox at the offices of SBC

the letterbox at the offices of SBC Warburg. in charge of the privatisation of Railtrack. Until the postman calls, normal investment criteria do not apply to one of this year's two biggest stock market debuts.

The best indications are that Labour, pledged to insert a policy statement into the Railtrack prospectus, will go for a political fudge, something along the lines of "when appropriate, we might or might not pursue our goal of stealing the track and signals back from the people who own it."

This would be an act of moral cowardice that would disappoint many, inside and outside the City, who had hoped for better from New Labour. But take it as a fait accompli, and it does allow a few preliminary numbers to be done and a few assumptions to be made about the Railtrack sale.

Investors will want to know first, what sort of price they will be expected to put up, and second, what can go wrong with their investment thereafter. The price will reflect the dividend yield Railtrack's advisers think will be necessary to get the issue away, and how much higher this yield will have to be than that already on offer from existing privatised utilities.

Fudge on the line

The figures being worked on, all based on the financial year ending at the end of this week, allow comparison with two, the National Grid that was floated last year and BT, on the stock market for more than a decade.

Both yield approaching 7 per cent, high in stock market terms, because of the regulatory risks they face. BT is in open conflict with its regulator while the Grid, because of executive share options and other unpleasantness, is one of the bad boys in the utilities contra and many he had utilities sector and may be heading for future grief.

Railtrack believes that while it must bear some political risk, the regulatory danger is slim; the restructured rail industry is held together by a network of contractual agreements between train operators, the Government and the regulator which would, le-gally, be the devil's work to unpick. The two balance out, assuming a Labour fudge, which suggests a similar yield to Grid and BT. Add on 10 to 15 per cent as a premium for investors and assume a 7 per cent dividend growth for the first year under private ownership, and the historic yield at flotation works out somewhere short of 7.5 per cent. We shall see. As to what can go wrong, there would seem to be only one real risk, and that is if the new Railtrack bosses prove even more incompetent than British Rail. Widespread signal failure, say, and the company loses revenue from the train operators in the form of track access charges to the point, ultimately, that it would be unable to pay a dividend.

This would seem wildly improbable, even if much of the board are BR veterans. The only other possible risk comes from Labour. Over to you, Mr Blair.

Millwall no match for the Reds

IT WOULD probably have been a closer contest if Manchester United had met Millwall on a football pitch. But yesterday the two football clubs met as stock market rivals to produce results that were in different leagues.

United oozed Premiership class as the company more than doubled pre-tax half year profits PENNINGTON to £15.2 million and raised the interim dividend to 1.6p, even if the club had, by its high standards, a poor start to the season. Miliwall saw losses treble to £376,000 and no dividend, even though attendences were up.

United's success, coupled with a promising stock market performance of late by Tottenham Hotspur, has led other clubs to explore the idea of flotation. In recent months, Chelsea, Leeds, Arsenal, Aston Villa, even poor old West Bromwich Albion struggling in the Endsleigh League Division One, have expressed an interest in coming to the market

But while United has become a reputable investment vehicle, goal mouth, other football clubs may not be such a success especially given the run of the play so far. Manchester United is a global brand name that gives the company a lead in the chase for sponsorship and marketing deals and allows the club to weather a bad year on the pitch. Competition from Nike for United's kit contract forced Umbro to bid the price up to around £60 million.

Most of the other big clubs rely on the financial contributions of football crazy sugar-daddy, such as Sir Johr. Hall at Newcastle and Jack Walker at Blackburn. Shareholders in quoted clubs will be less keen than they are for success at any price, especially if it starts to hit dividend payments.

Above all, the gap between football success and failure will always remain marginal. It only takes one dodgy refereeing decision or a changing room bust-up with the stroppy star striker to wreck the balance sheet. But the disregard shown by the fans for the financials will still drive the share price. Most football share certificates will always belong on the bedroom wall, with the season ticket, the kit and the autographed teamsheet.

Banking on the next disaster

□ BANKERS, like First World War generals it seems, are still fighting the war before. A list of 50 terrible things that could go wrong soon, culled from a survey of bankers, regulators and other professionals, includes inadequate regulation, a rogue trader, electronic fraud and a Japanese financial crisis.

All this, after Barings, Nick Leeson, a $10 million computer theft from Citibank and the Daiwa scandal, suggests that the respondents at least read the news headlines. But their nomination for the biggest threat of all, the next runaway asteroid to splash down on the world banking system, does imply some degree of self-knowledge and wisdom — along with a chilling belief in the inevitability of the next banking disaster. That threat, in the Centre for the Study of Financial Innova-tion's list of impending banana skins, is that over-capacity and thin margins require banks to do silly things to hold market share. "Unwise diversification, and an obsession with size rather than profitability" is a phrase that eaps out with a strangely 1980s air to it.

The worry is that while the majority of respondents think their industry is heading for disaster, each banker individually cresumably thinks he or ually presumably thinks he or she is acting responsibly and in the interests of shareholders and account-holders. It is the other fellow who is getting it wrong.

No saving grace

□ NOTABLE for its absence from Halifax's annual results yesterday was any comment on savings rates. Savers, forced to sit tight until they receive their payout after next year's conversion, are being kept in the dark. Will the recent cut in base rates force savings rates down, or will the Halifax, like its mutual rivals, absorb the cost and take the hit on its margins? A glance at the mortgage market might suggest the answer. The Nationwide, vociferously wedded to mutuality, will still be offering a cheaper mortgage than the Halifax when new rates come into effect on Monday.

UniChem vows to carry on buying

By Eric Reguly

UNICHEM, the drugs wholesaler and retailer, said that the monopolies referral of its £620 million bid for Lloyds Chemists will not deter it from growing by smaller acquisitions.
Jeffery Harris, chief executive, said that the company expects to buy out 50 or more independent pharmacists in 1996 and will pursue its European expansion strategy by forming joint ventures in the wholesale market. Pharmacies, he said, typically cost £400,000, and there are thousands from which to choose. Mr Harris said that he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to clear UniChem's bid for Lloyds, subject to a disposal of some, or all, of UniChem's wholesale business, and to clear the rival bid by Gehe of Germany. "We'll both come back to the match again," he said. UniChem made pre-tax profits of £49.4 million for 1995, up 12.3 per cent. Turnover was £1.4 billion, up 5.9 per cent. Operating profits were £46.8 million, up 14 per cent. Earnings were 19p a share, against 18.8p. A 5.3p final dividend, up from 4.7p, makes 8p, up 12.2 per cent.

City investors hit by another day of losses

AN EARLY sell-off of govern-ment bonds and the financial future set the seal on another day of losses for City investors. Behind it all was the worsening crisis over BSE and the arguments about how to resolve the issue. Financial markets thrive on speculation, but are rarely able to cope with uncertainty. This was not the best backdrop for today's issue by the Bank of England of E3 hillion of short-dated gilt stock.

A hesitant start to trading in New York added to investors woes and left the FT-SE 100 index nursing a fall of 21.0 points at 3,660.9. That stretches the loss of the past two days to 46.1. A total of 822 million shares changed hands. Glaxo Wellcome shrugged off an early fall prompted by a rival, had been given the goahead to market prilosec. its anti-ulcer drug, in the US. There was also talk that Glaxo Wellcome was about to linkup with Pfizer, a US rival. Its shares closed 232p dearer at 835 p. Glaxo denied the rumour.

Securicor continued to benefit from proposals to scrap the two-tier share structure and bring Security Services, its 50.75 per cent owned subsidiary, under one roof. The A shares surged a further 120p to Ell.75, with the ordinary 218p dearer at £20.23. Security Services finished 118p higher at £11.68. Between them, the companies own a 40 per cent stake in Cellnet, the mobile telephone operator.

News of the restructuring at Securicor comes just days before the start of dealings in Orange, the rival mobile phone operator being floated by Hutchison Whampoa and British Aerospace, down 9p at 855p. Orange shares were offered in a range of between 175p and 205p. Last night, it was looking as though the issue had been more than six times oversubscribed. Dealing are expected to open at about the 230p level.

There was further heavy turnover in Tomkins as the price firmed another 24p to 260p with 4.1 million shares traded. SBC Warburg and Goldman Sachs, the securities houses, are believed to have joined Kleinwort Benson and turned bullish of the stock after a period of underperformance. There has been talk that Greg Hutchings, chairman, is considering a share buy-back operation. A profits warning left Filtropic Comtek nursing a fall of 22p to 353p. Some of its biggest customers have been experiencing technical diffi-culties in the US developing code division multiple access systems for personal computers. The rescheduling of equipment orders worth $12 million means profits for the current year to May 31 are unlikely to Sentry Farming rallied op to 168p afer reassuring shareholders that events relating to BSE were unlikely to materially affect its profitability. Beef production accounted for just 1 per cent of turnover. P&O responded to a promise by Lord Sterling, chair-Royal Bank of Scotland fell 12p to 504p, for a two-day loss of 18p. in the wake of a profits downgrading by one of its own brokers. Credit Lyonnais Laing has cut its estimate for the current year

ous year. Profit-taking left Bernard Matthews, the Norfolk turkey producer, op lower at 116p. The shares have risen almost 30p in the past week following the growing crisis over mad cow disease. But the dairy producers continued to lose ground, worried by the threat to slaughter dairy herds resulting in dearer imported man, to obtain better returns for shareholders with a rise of 8p to 522p, after 540p. He plans to slim the group and raise more than £1 billion from the disposal of property and the demerger next year of Bovis, its construction business. He also refused to rule out the possibility of making a bid for Cunard, Trafalgar House's shipping line. News of the measures came as the group reported a drop in pretax profits last year from £349.5 million to £320.4 million.

An encouraging performance from Taylor Woodrow lifted the shares 11p to 149p. Pre-tax profits declined from £50.8 million to £46 million.

An impressive first-half performance by Manchester United, the Premier division title contender, was well received in the Square Mile, even though the shares finished 4p cheaper on the day at 282p.

Pre-tax profits more than doubled to £15.3 million, with the group generating £75,000 of merchandising income per game, compared with only £25,000 earlier in the season. This follows the near completion of the new stand at Old Trafford, which boosted spectactor numbers above the iginal 30,000 total. Further down the league tables, Millwall, the southeast London club, slipped 12p to 24p after plunging into the red in the first half. Pre-tax losses were £260,000, against a profit last time of £83,000. Money spent on new players and an early exit from cup competition were to blame.

Meggitt Holdings fell 92p to 95p after plunging into the red last year with losses of £2!.4 million against a profit of £14.8 million last time. Brokers have begun downgrading estimates for the current year amid worries about the fall in demand for electronic components in Europe.

GILT EDGED: Prices suffered an early sell-off from which they never really recovered. Still overshadowed by the BSE scare and its possible impact on the PSBR, investors were in no mood to open fresh positions before3 today's auction of £3 billion Treasury 7 per cent 2001. As a result turnover among shorter dated issues proved thin.

In the futures pit, the June series of the long gilt fell E3 to £104% as just 38,000 contracts were completed. Among conventional issues, Treasury 8 per cent 2015 lost £516 at £962132, while at the shorter end, Treasury 8 per cent 2000 was 4 easier at £102132. □ NEW YORK: Wall Street stocks were flat in early trading as little enthusiasm was generated by the Federal Reserve's widely expected decision to leave US monetary policy unchanged. At midday, the Dow Jones industrial average was up 4.70 at 5.648.56. TONDON FINANCIAL FITTIRES

the grumbling from its first class passengers. Yesterday he invited them all to the captain's table, promised them a more enjoyable cruise and the prospect of a gala dinner with extra pudding, if all goes well.

By all accounts the message was well received by City analysis and fund managers. P&O is addressing its fundamental weakness. cash flow, with a programme of disposals that could raise II billion. The company suffers from exposure to highly cash consumptive businesses such as shipping, housebuilding and commercial property. Last year, P&O invested 25 per cent more cash than it generated from operations and that was before payinginterest, tax and dividends.

The sale of Bovis Homes removes one drain on the purse and plans are afoot to retrieve

THE captain of P&O has finally taken heed of some capital from bulk shipping. If the market is there, P&O is likely to shrink its £2 billion property portfolio by more than the indicated £500 million. All to the good but the question is whether P&O can redeploy the capital in a way which will generate its target 15 per cent return and achieve that before the first class passengers start breaking the china. Container shipping is the core of the problem and P&O hopes that its strategic alliance with other ship owners will lead to industry consolidation.

Whether or not that process will result in P&O leading or leaving the business remains a question. Yesterday's message was a three-year haul to better returns. Investors might have preferred to hear of asset sales this year but the ship has finally altered course.

Taylor Woodrow

IT IS A brave or confident company which lifts its final dividend 50 per cent after

Taylor Woodrow's confidence is bolstered by wide overseas interests and by the near completion of major surgery on its business. The company generates more than 60 per cent of its revenue overseas, an expansion it has pursued to reduce its vulnerability to the dwindling output in UK

In the UK much of Taylor Woodrow's restructuring work is now complete and it should soon start to see some results. The prospects in the domestic building market are by no means glittering but the company has pledged to focus on projects which de-liver higher margin prospects. It has won encouraging business on football stadia and for private finance initiative work and it is the market leader in the growing area of healthcare. In tandem with a more focused approach to construction Taylor Woodrow is taking decisive action on its £450 million property investchunk of that will be sold with the cash pumped into property development. With low interest rates and a weak outlook for rental growth it makes sense to shift resources into more dynamic operations but demand for new space is patchy and the company will need to choose projects where market exposure is limited.

Charter

AFTER worries about a slowdown in the second half, Charter came up trumps in the second half. Esab. the welding equipment manufacturer generated a 17 per cent return on investment in its first year of ownership, despite a slowdown in Brazil because of the economic squeeze and a brand rationalisation programme in the US. Esab achieved a 10.5 per cent return on sales last year and the company reckons that it ought to trade at 10 per cent margins over the whole of the industrial cycle. That suggests that the welding business should be operating at margins of 11 per cent or more at the peak, a period that some would forecast within the next 12 months.

If Charter can push Esab's returns up a notch or two, the current share rating of about Il times current year earnings looks attractive but investors are already asking ing" role has attracted a fund manager but Carnegie Asset Management's Building Societies Investment Trusts have the added attraction of offering a better nominal return than the poor rate on high street deposits. Carnegie's new trust will invest in permanent interest bearing shares — instruments issued by societies as a means of raising wholesale capital. They yield a premium to long-term gilts - 9 per cent or more - giving a 7 per cent return and if the society converts, the bonus could add another 14 per cent.

Carnegie is probably right to assume that more societies will convert — the lure of options and diversification is too much for most building society bosses to resist. But there are relatively few societies to choose from. Some 12 of the 80 societies issue PIBS a small investment pool and Carnegie will boost the investment pool with shares in floated societies. However, it is an interesting variation on a bond pep with the possibility of more speculative capital gains.

MAD timing for Asda, which launched a multimillion-pound beef promotion throughout its supermarkets yesterday. Seemingly oblivious to the furnre down on the farm. Asda's Great British Beef promotion has been planned for the run up to Easter. For a fortnight. Asda shoppers have the opportunity of filling their baskets with bargains, including sirloin at £7.25 per pound as opposed to £9.99. The promotion is rumoured to have cost Asda E5 million, but the supermarket chain says its customers are over the moon. AUTHORSHIP of quotes is not always a precise science. So in attributing the quote that Halifax's E10 billion flotation next year will represent "possi-bly the biggest give away in terms of value in the history of the world" to chief executive Mike Blackburn, who delivered it at yesterday's results, would be wrong. The author was Gary Marsh, a Halifax spokesman.

Philip Bassett

on the EU governmental conference

Britain and Europe will be watching warily as the EU's leading politicians head for Turin for the start of the intergovernmental conference (IGC) un the future of Europe. They are worried that in the diplo-macy of updating the Maastricht treaty Europe's business and economic interests will not be at the forefront of the protracted negotiating process the IGC will become after its launch on Friday.

Unice, the cross-European employers' body, says it wants this IGC to avoid the difficulties encountered in 1991, the negotiating run-up to Maastricht. Chambers of commerce put it even more bluntly: "During the passage of the Maastricht treaty, there was little attention paid to the real effect on business, on jobs and on the prosperity of the nation."

Not this time, says business. This time, economic competitiveness — especially, for Europe against the "tiger" economies of the Far East and the emerging economic forces of India and China - must be to the fore.

Adair Turner, CBI Director General, says: "The EU faces two great challenges, the need to ensure that European business improves its competitiveness in world markets and the need to anchor the new democracies of Eastern Europe in an enlarged economic community.

"The IGC will prove to be a distraction unless it delivers change to institutions and decision-making which make competitiveness and enlargement more easily attained."

Robin Geldard, President of the British Chambers of Commerce, agrees - making specific reference to the issue over Europe that business sees as the most important and as having the potential for the greatest distraction. "Our big-gest worry would be that all this talk of a single currency. and more generally Europe, will divert UK business from the bigger objective: competitiveness on a world stage."

British business leaders say there is already enough about the IGC to worry them. Although there is no formal agenda for the IGC talks, the Maastricht commitment for a review of the treaty has a primarily structural focus: Issues such as the European legislative process, the EU presidency system, qualified majority voting, the number of commissioners, the powers of the European Parliament and the European Court of Justice. Business leaders in the UK believe that such matters, vital in the high councils of Europe, seem at best of limited relevance to companies in Britain worried about whether the slowdown in the economy will bite them as a new recession. But they insist that companies' complaints about Brussels, including legal measures especially about employment that they are still being required to implement show precisely why business should be concerned with the outcome of the IGC process. If you do not want your company hit by such moves, the message goes, then the IGC is not some irrelevant piece of Euro-nonsense, but something that really does matter. The UK Government's pre-

IGC paper was enough to stoke business concerns. In 27 pages, the word competitiveness appears only five times. even then, business judges, its secondary, or at least largely external, role is apparent. "The IGC needs to proceed in parallel with other necessary work, including the reform of key policies, and the need for member states to improve the competitiveness of their economies." And if that's the UK Government's view, goes business opinion, how much worse will be that of other EU countries, less wedded to the importance of competitiveness than Britain? In a letter to Malcolm Rifkind, CBI "opt-out" clause on the Foreign Secretary, about the Government's pre-IGC document, the British Chambers of Commerce says: "We perceive the lack of other departments' input, particularly the Department of Trade and Industry's, in the White Paper." Certainly, the competitiveness unit of Michael Heseltine, the Deputy Prime Minister was barely involved in preparing the UK's IGC line Business irritation at the IGC's perceived lack of competitive focus is widespread. But such unity masks deeper divi-sions over Europe, which business fears the IGC may amplify when the pork-barrel politics of the EU draws the whole process in towards what will inevitably be a compromise deal at its end in 18 months to two years' time. "Unice reaffirms its support for the objective of economic and monetary union and the introduction of the single currency on the basis of the Maastricht treaty conditions and timetable," says the European employers' body in its document for the IGC. The forthcoming IGC must not reopen negotiations on EMU." Such a bold statement makes Unice's British member, the CBI, uneasy. Indeed, Unice's IGC paper includes a

Opinion and anecdotal evidence confirm British business's dichotomy over Europe. With the rest of Europe as a key export market, business in the UK is firmly wedded to close and continuing European cooperation. But it finds some of social affairs, hard to take, at least in theory. The practical experience of some EU legislation, such as European works councils, is proving perhaps less of a horned beast than some of the ideological tubthumping from business at first suggested.

That leads to conflicting accounts of what business thinks. In its repeated calls for a "rational debate" on Europe, the CBI is at the same time clearly critical of the UK Government, which, it says, "needs to establish its credibility as a constructive force committed to

Yet organisations such as the Institute of Directors, which is devoting the whole of its annual conference next month to Europe, claims a strong and strongly hostile homogeneity to some key European issues such as the single currency and the social chapter. Ruth Lea, IoD policy head, says: Business is sending a very clear message to politicians about these issues, and we hope they will be carefully noted during negotiations in the forthcoming IGC."

What British business

wants from the IGC is clear: ☐ Competitiveness. Business says that if Europe fails to be competitive it will be incapa-ble of achieving any of its objectives.At present, strengthening competitiveness is only an "activity" of the EU. For the IGC, business in Europe is proposing that it be upgraded to a full objective.

Single market. More than three years after coming into effect, the single market is seen by business as incomplete. If the powers of European institutions need to be changed, business wants to see them enhanced to ensure the full completion of the single DEMU. In the main, business is positive about monetary union. However, it remains worried about the convergance criteria and the timetable. If the IGC is to touch EMU, it should enact change only that enhances rather than detracts from it. ☐ Deregulation. Business fears that the IGC will lead to a new raft of regulation and is insisting that any proposals for amendments to Maastricht should be specifically and rigorously tested for their effect on the creation and the development of small and medium-sized enterprises. ☐ Transparency. Any IGC changes to European institutions, such as the voting strengths of different member states, should be clear and judged on the basis of efficiency and the equity of implementation.

☐ Social policy. A competitiveness test is the bare minimum, and some business leaders now state that there are simply no further areas where any EU legislation should impact upon the employment relationship; in other words, social policy should

All this is a sizeable agenda. But business feeling is that however sizeable, it is not the business will be looking hard at Turin and what follows. Peter Agar, the CBI's deputy director-general, says: "We are not saying, drop the IGC agenda and do something completely different, but whatever it says on institutional change we ought to ask is that going to help deliver a Europe better able to to compete in world markets, to grow and to create jobs."

Next climbdown: Helmut and his mad EMU plan?

The embattled John Major and the trium-phant Helmut Kohl have not got much in common. But they do share two striking qualities: a political will which confounds their opponents; and an ability to ignore uncomfortable realities which is the despair of their supporters. Both have chosen the same week to demonstrate them.

Major may seem to have followed his model, Mr Micawber, into the realms of pure fantasy. What, apart from EU subventions, can possibly turn up to help him this time? Public memory is short, and tax cuts and the smell of roast beef may yet prove more appetising than now seems possible; but first there must be some sort of climbdown, and yet more humiliation. He is also no doubt aware (and Tony Blair clearly agrees) that public indignation against the EU could be very helpful to the Tories; and Brussels has played his game by over-

The Kohl game plan is just the opposite. Helmut, who reunited Germany at one bold (and expensive) stroke is now going to unite Europe itself. He clearly understands the romantic German soul much better than his bean-counting SDP opponents. They were trying to frighten German voters into clinging to their Dmark, got it wrong, and so belped to rescue the Free Democrats for the umpteenth time. The Chancellor will be harder than ever to restrain at the inter-governmental meeting in Turin. But despite appearances, he too is playing Micawber. What he hopes will turn up is the German economy. Unless the current mild German revival matures nto something really beefy. it may be Germany rather than France which misses the EMU convergence criteria. The French have realistically revised their growth forecast for this year down to 1.4 per cent, and still hope to get within a plausible distance of a 3 per cent deficit. Germany is still relying on a growingly implausible official growth forecast

Implausible, but not impossible in present conditions. The Bundesbank has cut rates more boldly than anyone expected. It has already achieved a 6 per cent devaluation against the dollar. and a renewal of broad money growth which has encouraged broad monetarists to forecast a boom. The catch is that official plans would undermine current conditions. The bond market is expecting further "savage" Budget cuts, which could negate much of the Bundesbank's good work; and the plan to finance cuts in employment taxes with a sharp rise in VAT could shake voters out of their romantic dreams.

These are not the only dangers. First, how much will low rates help? History sug-gests German growth and investment are more responsive to long-term interest rates than to money rates, and here policy has been much less successful. German bonds now yield more than their US counterparts — a familiar pattern in London, but a new and rather humiliating one in Frankfurt. Have investors noticed the US is now much nearer to Maastricht virtue than any EU member?

blame for German bond troubles. Foreign MU itself is partly to investors are a little chary of D-mark bonds which may be repaid in unknown euros. Any suggestion of fudge on the Maastricht rules will make them charier; and we already have a steep yield curve. This does not usually promise growth; and it may well inhibit Buba from more cuts to reduce overva the core European

If Germany gets a shock, such as Holland's from the Fokker collapse, the political mood could become very fragile. Small wonder, then, that some of Kohl's supporters want an easier timetable. For the present, he will follow the Major strategy, and keep his fingers crossed. But next year?

From Dr Marcel Cohen Sir, I write in response to articles on March 1 on the BP and Mobil forecourt link-up. My own research shows that Mobil's trading territory has less overlap with other brands than its competitors. Therefore a link-up with Mobil is an attractive proposition for petrol companies wishing to access "new" sales. No doubt BP will have done its own howework and arrived at the same conclusion. BP and

Mobil tell us that increasing the volumes base will save costs. However, "buying" new volumes does not address the underlying question — why is volume falling in the first

You do not need an MBA to work out the main problem facing petrol marketers is that motorists perceive little or no difference between competing brands. Surely it is this issue that oil companies should

In April, The Management School will hold a one-week seminar "marketing for petrol marketers" when this very point will be discussed. Surprisingly, only a handful of petrol companies believe they should attend. Yours faithfully. MARCEL COHEN Lecturer in Marketing,

Finland flies the European Union flag

From Mr Donald Tait Sir. It appears from Anthony Harris's article on March 20 about the EU unemployment problem that his antipathy towards things "European" has clouded slightly his memory. Finland became a member of the European Union in January 1995. Prehaps he meant Norway, or somewhere totally different. Yours faithfully. DONALD TAIT. 29 Sint-Katelijne Straat, 1000 Brussels, Belguim.

Let the marketing director get in the picture

From Mr Noel Gee Sir, At company annual report time we always seem to be shown a picture of the chief executive accompanied by the finance director. Ought this not to be the marketing director? After all, he generates the company income: the finance man only has to count it. Yours faithfully, NOEL GEE 4 Rushmead Ham, Richmond year to December 30.

THE benefits of a big marketing campaign together with a tighter strategic focus helped Iceland Group, the frozen food retailer, celebrate its 25th year of consecutive profits' growth.

The group added that during this year it plans to spend £25 million on relitting more than 100 of its older stores and plans to open 40 more. Last year Iceland opened 56 new stores, lifting the total to 752. The group's capital expenditure is expected to rise £9 million to £75 million because of the new store openings. refurbishments and planned investment in IT systems. Pre-tax profits edged ahead 3.4 per cent from £70.2 million to £72.6 million on sales up 5.6 per cent at £1.4 billion in the Food sales rose 5.8 per cent to £1.3 billion, in spite of an autumn fall in like-for-like sales. In September, in an attempt to counterr this, a big marketing campaign was launched, coinciding with its 25th anniversary. Malcolm Walker, chairman and chief executive, said: "This resulted in a turnaround in like-forlike food sales from minus 3.5 per cent in the first nine weeks of the second half to 2 per cent growth in the final 17 weeks." The final 3.6p dividend, due

May 24, makes a year's total of 5.25p, up 25 per cent from last time. Earnings per share rose 1.8 per cent to 17p. The shares gained 3p to 155p.

Hamleys, the self-styled finest toyshop in the world, showed the benefit of a mini tourist boom in 1995 with a £750,000 rise in pre-tax profits to £6.4 million in the year to January 27. The flagship Regent store in London Street achieved a 10 per cent sales increase and stores at Covent Garden, Heathrow and serving the Channel Tunnel achieved combined growth of 42 per cent.

Howard Dyer, the chairman, said: *Current trading is ahead of last year, alpotential return of terrorism is an unknown factor." The dividend is raised from 7p to 8.lp, with a 5.4p final, on earnings per share of 19.3p, compared with 21.2p.

Upton back to the black

Upton & Southern, the department stores group that came close to collapse last summer after putting the Reject Shop into receivership, returned to profit in the 26 weeks to January 27.

The retailer made a pre-tax profit of £274,000 on sales of £4.8 million compared with a El 2 million loss last time on sales of £20.6 million. There is no final dividend.

Boxmore boost

Boxmore International, the packaging company based in Northern Ireland, lifted pre-tax profits to £11.1 million in 1995 from £7.05 million in 1994. Total dividend rises to 5.28p a share from 4.48p, with a 3.66p final. Harold Ennis, chairman, said that al-though a cautious view may be taken of European economies, many export mar-kets are still buoyant. The shares rose 20p to 502p.

The Treasury yesterday is-sued a consultation document outlining proposed amendments to the Financial Services Act that will give investors better protection when Crest, the new computerised and paperless share settlement system, comes into effect in July.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Higher volume lifts Lloyd Thompson

NEW contracts with British Telecom, Halifax Building Society, and RTZ helped increase business for Lloyd Thompson Group, the international insurance and reinsurance broker, for the six months to December 31. Brokerage rose 8 per cent to E23.1 million from higher volume, while pretax profit increased 14 per cent to £10.4 million.

Ken Carter, chief executive, said results for the first half had benefited from a high level of investment income, although, given the decline in interest rates in recent months, this was unlikely to be maintained in the second half. The interim dividend is lifted to 3p (2.75p).

ALP in property sale

ALLIED LONDON PROPERTY has raised £42 million through the sale of 12 investment properties to an unidentified, private property company. The portfolio included office, industrial and retail properties with a book value of £40.9 million. Net rental income of the properties is £4.2 million a year, ALP said. The company also reported a decline in pre-tax profits to £4.2 million in the six months to the end of December from £5.89 million in the first half of the previous year. The interim dividend is held at 1.18p.

Barr & Wallace slides

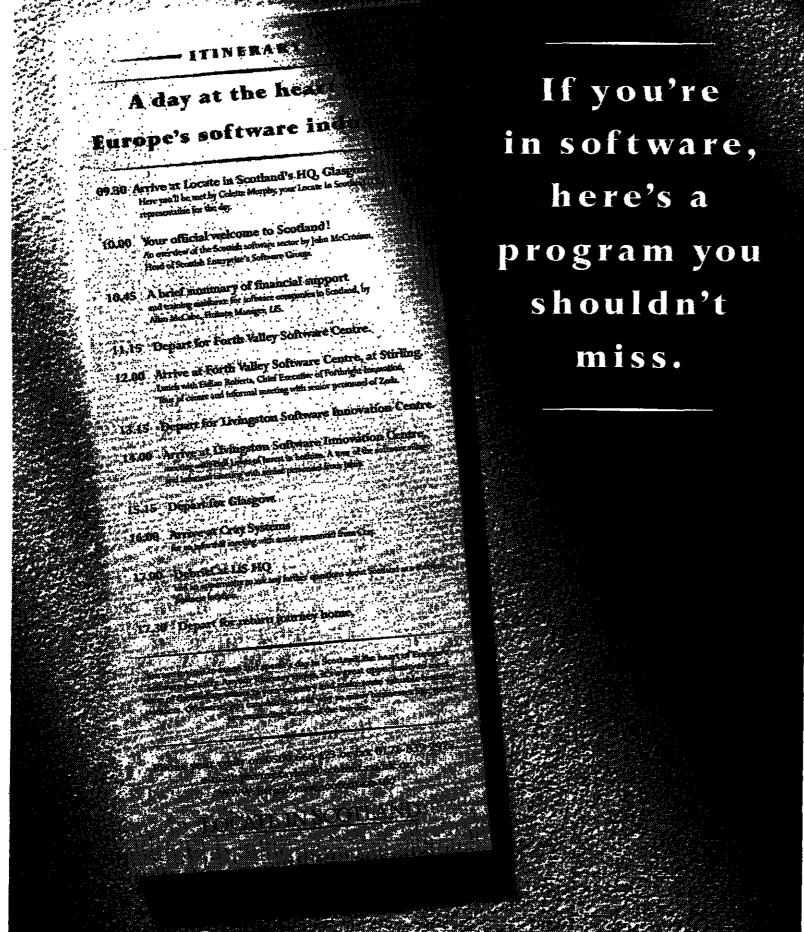

BARR & WALLACE ARNOLD TRUST, the motor retail and leisure group, is maintaining the total dividend for 1995 at Ilp a share, with an unchanged Sp final payout, after a decline in annual profits to £4.6 million before tax from £5.6 million. Earnings were 20.8p a share against 22.3p. The company said overheads and gearing were reduced, strengthening the balance sheet. Trading so far this year was generally in line with the board's expectations and was ahead of last year. The shares fell 4p to 22p.

Barclays picks Norwich

NORWICH UNION has beaten competition from Royal Insurance and Commercial Union to supply household insurance products to Barclays Insurance Services (Bisco). Norwich Union will provide personal general insurance products and claims services to Bisco's 500,000 customers in a deal worth more than £100 million a year in premium income. Norwich Union will provide a 24-hour claims service, starting with household clients, to be followed by other personal insurance projects. Bisco had been using a panel of insurers.

JD WETHERSPOON, the acquisitive UK pub operator, is raising £13.5 million through a private placing of shares in America. Institutional investors have subscribed for 1.8 million new shares, representing 5 per cent of the company's share capital, at 786p each. Existing shares put on 39p to 830p yesterday. The company said that the proceeds of the placing, combined with recently agreed additional bank facilities, will be used to fund further expansion.

This Easter weekend, drop in for a glass, a bite, some words of wisdom and a peek at our 5 new showhomes.

It's Easter and it's all happening at Britannia Village.

Why not change whatever plans you've made for any of the four days and drop in on the Royal Victoria Dock, where Wimpey Homes are embarking on the most exciting waterside development in Waiting for your inspection are our five new fully furnished show homes, and our homebuying advisers will be delighted to show you round and answer any questions you may have.

Also on hand, at selected times, will be an Independent Financial Adviser who'll tell you everything you ever wanted to know about mortgages and finance, without charging you a penny, and a solicitor who'll be happy to offer free legal advice on buying one of these modern waterside homes.

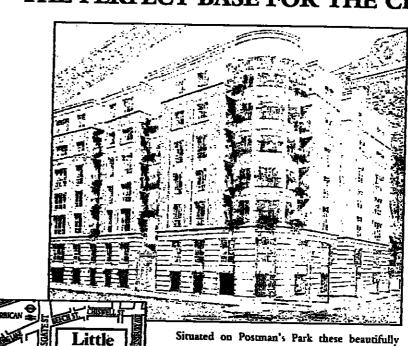

Still not tempted? Then how about something nice to eat and a glass of wine to wash it down. On the house.

Britannia Village is open from 10am to 6pm all four days of Easter. For further information and details of the weekend's events, call Sheila Whitbread or Steve Osmond on 0171 474 2200. http://www.wimpey.co.uk/wimpey/britvlg.htm

A new housing development is to

To the run-down manor born

Rachel Kelly on why a squire and his wife are swapping suburbia

hen Sir Reginald Gra-ham moved into Norton Conyers in 1886, there were receptions in the nearby villages, flags and banners in every street. Church bells rang. As he approached the house near Ripon in North Yorkshire, the horses were removed from his carriage and it was drawn by the tenantry and local gentlemen almost a mile to the house. He was greeted by a row of uniformed

This week, a hundred years later. Sir Reginald's great-grandson, Sir James Graham, and his wife, Lady Graham, are moving into Norton Conyers. Yet this time the Grahams are entering by the back door. There will be no staff in attendance and supper will be an instant Marks & Spencer meal popped in the Aga.

It is a courageous step. At a time of their lives when contemporaries are considering a move into retirement bungalows, the Grahams, who are in their mid-fifties, are taking up residence in a crumbling stately pile with 40 rooms and a great hall but no central heating. The house, built in about 1500 by an unknown architect, has a Grade I listed interior and is famous as the model for Thornfield Hall, home of the saturnine Mr Rochester in Charlotte Brontë's Jane Eyre.

The description in the novel fits the house exactly. Three storeys high, of proportions not vast, though considerable; a gentleman's manor house, not a nobleman's seat." True to the novel, there is a rookery, a sunken fence and a wide oak staircase.

Bronte came across gossip about a deranged woman in the family who had once been confined in an attic room at Norton Conyers. Eight years later Jane Eyre was published. The bare, whitewashed room is still there — even more eerily cold than the rest of the house, the day I visited.

"We feel moving here is the natural thing to do," says Lady Graham. "My husband has a deep-

Sir James and Lady Graham hope to restore their ancestral home, Norton Conyers in Wath, North Yorkshire, to its former glory seated attachment to the house and a sense of duty to pass it on in better shape. The house needs such a lot of work on it."

Sir James inherited Norton Conyers, where he was born and brought up, in 1984. Since then, extensive repairs have been carried out to make the house more

"The lead flashings between the slates had so many little holes in them that they looked like pincushions," recalls Sir James. "I realised that simply loving the house and being born here was not enough. I knew too little about its architectural history and its structure. We needed outside expertise to tackle such a big and complex task." Enter English Heritage. The organisation contributed its first grant between 1984 and 1988, when it gave £22,900 towards stopping the water coming in and repairing the 18th-century orangery. A futher grant is being spent on guttering repairs and refurbishing the 18th-century stable block and 17th-

Although the house as it stands dates from the 16th century, there has been a manor house on the site since the Norman Conquest. It is mentioned in the Domesday Book, when it belonged to a Norman family named Conyers.

n the 14th century the manor was bought by the Nortons, Roman Catholics who rallied to Mary Queen of Scots in the rising of the North against Queen Elizabeth I and were punished by having their estates confiscated.

Sir Richard Graham, the 1st Baronet and direct ancestor of the present owner, the 11th Baronet Sir

James, bought the house in 1624. As one of the King's Gentlemen of the Horse, he fought for Charles I at the Battle of Edgehill in the Civil War in 1642. Subsequently the Parliamentarians fined him heavily for his Royalist support.

To reoccupy their family seat, the present-day Grahams are moving from their four-bedroom Victorian semi-detached home in Bedford, which would fit in a small corner of the Great Hall. Lady Graham has taken early retirement from her job as a museum curator, which until recently kept them in the South. "Our friends think we are mad," says Lady Graham. "The only warm room is the kitchen because it has an Aga. But my sister gave me a nice woolly hat with side-flaps and I wear extra socks."

thetically restoring the house, which is open to the public and attracts 2,000 visitors a year. "We see ourselves as conservationists, not restorers," says Lady Graham. "Repairs are being done in such a way that they don't shout at the visitor Look! I've been The house needs a further £5 million spent on repairing the roof of the main house and an adjoining stable block. The Grahams hope for extra funds from English Heritage or the National Heritage Memorial Fund.

The sums are huge, but this house is a magnificent example of an early squire's house and has been used as the setting for one of the classics of English literature. It is worth saving. ● Norton Conyers is off the A61 near Ripon (01765 640333)

The Historic Houses Association, which represents 4,000 stately home owners, says it believes the scheme is the first of its kind. Forty houses and flats are being built in the parkland surrounding Northwick Park, Blockley, a Grade I listed mansion three miles from Chipping Campden and once owned by the Spencer-Churchill family.

Seven houses have been completed, and six sold for prices ranging from £85,000 to £250,000 for a four-bedroom house through the agents Knight Frank. The scheme will be completed in 18 months' time. The house itself and its coach houses, stables, granary, or-angery and dovecote were con-verted six years ago. Clarendon Properties, the developers, spent £1.8 million restoring the house and converting it into six flats, two on each floor, and in return were granted permission by Cotswolds District Council to build the new homes in local stone as part of the "enabling development". The 35-acre park has been freshly planted with oak and ash and the estate walls

The original house, known for its magnificent unaltered west elevation, was built in 1686, and was extensively remodelled in 1723 by Sir John Rushout using the fashionable architect Lord. Burlington. The estate passed to the Spencer-Churchill family and remained with them until the death of Captain Spencer Churchill in the early 1960s. The house then became a drug-rehabilitation centre, and had stood empty for several years; when the developers bought it in 1989. It had dry rot, woodworm

The new houses, which have tiled or slate roofs, are in keeping with traditional local architecture. There are four hard tennis courts and an outdoor swimming pool is to and a leaking roof.

Conservationist and heritage bodies say that such develop-ments need to be done with care. William Proby, of the Historic Houses Association, says "De-velopers must be careful not to destroy the setting of the house by inappropriate buildings."

as accountants, solicitors and engineers have historically clustered in "brass plaque" areas of town centres, within walking distance of each other, and of banks, chambers of commerce and business clubs. But, spurred by traffic congestion and increasingly mobile clients, many are venturing into modern, motorway-based business parks alongside high-tech companies and financial institutions.

This month, for example, Shoosmiths and Harrison, one of the largest regional law firms, moved 280 staff working in Northampton from three town-centre locations to a 50,000 sq ft pre-let on Wilson Connolly Properties' Lakes Business Park. "We needed more efficient accommodation," says John Peet, a partner, "and have been able to build in space for expansion." In 1992 the firm opened an office on the M27-based Solent Business Park, developed by Arlington, alongside Scottish Amicable, Norwich Union, Pearl Assurance and London and Manchester Assurance. 'We don't have too many high street-type clients, so there was no particular reason for setting up in a town centre," says Patricia Barnes, their South Coast facilities manager. The firm has expanded from 2,000 sq ft of David Crawford looks at the number of high street firms

In 1992, W. S. Atkins needed to open a Thames Valley office after acquiring the privatised Oxfordshire County Council department of planning and property services. It opted for 13,000 sq ft of speculative space (now increased to 25,000 sq ft) on Evans of Leeds ple's Chilbrook Oasis Business Park at Eynsham, seven miles west of Oxford. "Our main reasons were ease of access nationwide, avoidance of peak-hour congestion and easy parking," says Hugh Roberts, a director. If this trend continues, town

gearing up for the ninetieth anniversary, on April 13, of the birth of Samuel Beckett. A clutch of festivals and conferences in Europe and America suggests that Beckett's status as a towering genius of the 20th century will be roundly celebrated. In other quarters, however, they know nothing and care just as little about this recondite figure. hirthday or not.

Just go into bookshops in this country and try to find Becken's novels (for some admirers, he is among the most skilful exponents of the form). You might know of Waiting For academia, ignored elsewhere? That would be a shame. This Knowlson was the man, after all, who in his early twenties moved from his native Dublin to Paris. where he quickly became a friend of James Joyce. Who escaped, by only a few hours, deportation to a Nazi concentration camp during the Second World War. And who rose to (not exactly welcome) prominence as a pioneer of postwar existentialism. Beckett's work, it seemed, came smack at the turningpoint of the 20th century, when modernism was whittled into something even more extraordinarily lean. Who but Beckett could have written a drama, Not I. whose central "character" is an illuminated mouth? Or another, Breath, consisting of two faint cries and lasting for about 35 seconds? The whys and wherefores of this strangely shaped body of work will be pondered in various corners of the globe over the next weeks and months. Imagine being a Beckett expert at such a time, caught in a cycle of duties of, n some quarters, they are James Knowlson. Beckett's authorised biographer, is due to put in an appearance this weekend at a Goldsmiths'. University of London, conference focusing on Beckett's time in London in the 1930s. Knowlson will then jet off to give a keynote lecture in Strasbourg, and will be speaking in Florence in May. In between he is correcting the proofs of Damned to Fame:

The Life of Samuel Beckett, which will be published in September. Knowlson knew Beckett for the last 20 years of the author's life, and interviewed him a number of times during the his death in 1989. He promises a number of new angles on the writer. The first, he says, will counter the impression of Beckett as a "miserabilist", concerned only to pointlessness of

Knowlson says. "Dinners, meetings, drinks - you couldn't actually talk to Beckett without bursting into hoots of laughter.

But before you conjure up a remorselessly mirthful character. Knowlson emphasises Beckett's quietly ethical di-mension. "Everyone says that this guy is apolitical. But he joined the French Resistance, he banned all his plays from being produced in South Africa and - what hasn't been known until now -- he gave all his Polish royalties to victims of the oppression of Knowlson points to another new revelation. "Nobody has realised yet that Beckett was a connoisseur of painting, of the great masters. His own images can be seen to be inspired Rembrandts and Dürers and Antonellos. When you look at some of these paintings you see Beckett's figures."

Solidarity.

Beckett's work certainly offers the most striking images, both complex and simple like the parents in dustbins in Endgame, or the five-second, toothless smile of Listener at the end of That Time. I must declare an interest here, havine directed the production of Beckett's Act Without Words I and II, currently at the BAC Theatre in London, Both pieces are mime dramas with a clownish tinge, but working on them is like opening a Russian doll: the more you look, the more layers there are.

Tom Morris, the BAC's artistic director, is staging a production of All That Fall as his contribution to the venue's Beckett season. Why present a play written for radio in the theatre? "For the most part radio is listened to as a chatty voice in the corner of your kitchen," Morris says. "My starting point was, what would it be like to engulf the audience in a sound world in total darkness? As you read the play your head is completely enveloped in noise, whether it's a crowing cockerel old man levering a 200lb woman into his car. It is written with this fantastic aural imagination." Across the Thames, Katie Mitchell is preparing a production of Endgame for the Donmar Warehouse. She argues that the play, although

"For as long as the human race lasts there will always be this great fear that it will all end, be it through the of the ozone layer. And that's where he is contextualising what is in effect a family drama. Perhaps this sense of dealing with current concerns albeit doomy ones - will rescue Beckett from his poten-

nar rooms of academia. There is a real danger in the fact that he has become part of the syllabus, a classic," says Keir Elam, who is organising the conference in Florence and contributing to the one in London. He reports, though, that Beckett is enjoying someacclaim in Italy.

"All the prose works have just been republished in a new Italian translation. They're read, and there's a great deal of debate about them. The plays are very much performed and nearly all the major actors in Italy have tried to come to grips with Beckett. He's had enormous influence. partly in ways of conceiving the use of the stage. He taught directors how to simplify." Mitchell echoes this theme.

stimulate our own imagination. Although listenbroadcast of the (more or less) first British performance of the Glass conaware of it, the Philharmonic Hall was reverberant with hundreds of unheard tunes drawn

the melodic vacuum.

The professional restraint of the Rascher Saxophone Quartet in resisting the temptation to improvise a little linear interest here and there was only slightly less admirable than their virtuosity in the activity of the second and fourth movements. It was disappointing, however, that their encore was a Bach arrangement. The virtue of Barber's Adagio for strings is that, as a fundamentally contrapuntal conception, it has no accompaniment figure. The sin of the Saint-Saens Organ Symhony, on the other hand, s that it is based on one. But sin and religious sentiment have long been compatible partners in French artistic taste. Jerzy Maksymiuk, the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra and its sentimental organ proved to be as adept in exploiting that fruitful contradiction as they were in profiling the long-term structural progress of the work.

GERALD LARNER

WITH the polls suggesting that insecurity at work worries the British more than anything else. Jimmy Murphy's new play is undoubtedly timely. It may be set in Dublin and it may involve house-painters. but it does not take huge imagination to transpose its action to a hundred thousand offices on this side of the Irish Sea. Brothers of the Brush is a nightmare for the 1990s, a killer-fantasy in which virtue goes unrewarded, vice stays unpunished and poetic injustice flourishes.

That does not sound like a recipe for a fun evening, and there are times when Murphy's tale of three wrangling decorators and their gaffer seems repetitive and doggedly realistic. But plays do not win loads of awards in 1990s Ireland, as Brothers of the Brush has done, without having plenty going for them.

Murphy's writing and Lynne Parker's strong cast generate a surprising amount of tension, intensity and meaning from "small" lives. And judging by the gasps of horror near me, I was not the only person in the audience who ended up ready to leap on stage and grab the triumphant villain by the throat.

Martin's three employees -Lar, Heno and his Uncle Jack - are drawing the dole while simultaneously earning £25 a day from him for painting a basement. Bad feeling, already festering below the surface, erupts when he gives the job of foreman to Lar instead of the more senior Jack. Quite how men who are theoretically unemployed can go on strike and even mount an amateurish picket is not easy to understand: but Heno and Jack contrive to do so, with results that at first seem comic but have become ugly and distressing by the final

his shabby Dublin microcosm. He creates a world not unlike the real-estate jungle of David Mamet's Glengarry Glen Ross. Economic recession has brought competition so intense that few survive unless they bend or break the rules. Hence backhanders and bribes, hasty work and shoddy workmanship, and maxi-mum exploitation of the black economy. But this does not mean that Murphy is writing the kind of dour propagandist piece fashionable when socialism still struck the idealistic as a cure-ali. On the contrary, he con-founds every ideological ex-pectation. Yes, Darragh Kelly's Martin is fly and tough - but how can you blame him when, as he says, it takes a week to read the names of every firm offering decorating services in the Yellow Pages. Yes. Stuart Graham's Lar is a bit of a boss's man - and why not, given the desperation and misery that unemployment has caused his family? Yes, Phelim Drew's Heno makes a stand for workers' rights, but in ways that suggest he has taken a degree in Advanced Brothers of the Brush these painters are not. Instead, Murphy and his cast show us manipulation and callousness in a dog-eat-dog substratum disturbingly akin to society as a whole - and not in any abstract way. They make you feel the pain of grovelling to the man from the mortgage company and the terror of such humiliations recurring. They give flesh, or rather gooseflesh, to contemporary insecurity.

ways an old head on young shoulders. And he has reasons for thinking that his Grieg just might be a little different. Born in Kuwait to a family of Indian physicians, he fell for the piano after hearing Scott Joplin's piano rags, played every evening at closedown on Kuwaiti television. By the age of six he had chosen his instrument; at seven he was on to Grade 5 and on his way to Wells Cathedral school. But at just as he had gone home for the summer holidays, Iraq invaded Kuwait and he found himself caught up in the Gulf

Cinderella Coliseum

This is just what English National Ballet needed. After Derek Deane's superficial Alice in Wonderland, a work that sorely under-utilised ENB's dancers, we get Michael Corder's new Cinderella, a work so filled with wonderful choreography that every person on stage looks reinvigorated by the sheer pleasure of dancing it. Cinderella is the exact opposite of Alice. Everything in Corder's production is driven by the music and realised by steps (although to be fair to Deane, the music for Alice was no great shakes). There is no mine, no time-wasting dramatic posturing, no protracted comic nonsense. There are even no mice. The choreography says it all, and says it beautifully.

Corder grew up with Ashton's Cinderella — he was a dancer with the Royal Ballet for many years — but his version for ENB owes little to Ashton's pantomime-inspired example. The Stepsisters are ugly of spirit, not physique, and their cruel self-satisfaction and grotesque coquettishness are expressed through classical soloist dancing, not musichall antics.

Corder's Cinderella is a much grander vision, in the tradition of 19th-century Russian ballet, and with greater psychological depth. Act III opens with the Prince tormented by a nightmare brought on by the sudden disappearance of the unknown woman who has captured his heart. The stunning apotheosis (designer David Walker's finest moment) places Cinderella and the Prince in a star-studded night world where the dancing is touched by the magic and mystery of transcendent love.

Lisa Pavane as Cinderella, Greg Horsman as the Prince in ENB's joyous production

Corder clearly adores Prokofiev's brilliant score (he uses all of it). His dancers' bodies swoon over its lush, surging melodies, they happily sing along with its elegant punctuations, giddy with the musical rush that informs all of Corder's writing. The choreography strikes deep: some of the best is for the ensemble, who frame the principals like a glittering necklace of well-cut jewels. Soloists also shine: the fairies of the four seasons, accompanied by cavaliers, offer pas de deux of intricate variety and characterful presentation (and they get to come back for more in

Like a true classicist. Corder knows how to build the corps de ballet into the action. Cinderella's send-off to the ball sees her escorted by a glamorous procession of fairies and stars. Her arrival at the palace (carried in on a young man's shoulders) is so attentiongrabbing, it's no wonder the Prince is captivated by her before they are even formally introduced.

her dancing phrased with luxuriant fluency in the upper body, her flamboyant pirouetting display at the ball delivered with majestic confidence. Greg Horsman's Prince is no less accomplished, especially in his big numbers.

There are excellent performances by Elisabeth Miegge and Monica Perego as the Stepsisters: Emma Greenhalgh is a lovely Fairy Godmother. The ENB Orchestra (conducted by David Coleman on Monday night) acquitted themselves well in parts.

DEBRA CRAINE

Duke Erikson. The mix on Manson prevented her vocals from filling the outer recesses of this huge room, but there was no doubting her magnetism as she rode the juggernaut riffs of Fix Me Now and Bow Down to Me. Nor does the innate coolness compromise a down-to-earth approachability. Manson, for one, is clearly enjoying their wild ride. The quasi-orchestral Milk meanwhile, underlined their maturity and depth. At a time when Britpop has practically imposed import restrictions on American rock, Garbage have created harmony in mid-Atlantic

PAUL SEXTON

IT IS now nearly 30 years since the famous occasion when Miles Davis walked into Ronnie Scott's and was so impressed with the bass playing of 22-year-old Dave Holland that he offered to take him to New York. The Wolverhampton-born bassist ended up playing on two seminal Davis albums. In a Silent Way and Bitches Brew.

Dave Holland

Braxton and Chick Corea, through "supergroup" work with Herbie Hancock, Jack DeJohnette and Pat Metheny to cutting-edge street-sound such as Steve Coleman. So it was no surprise to find that his current quartet consists of some of the most experienced and accomplished musicians around: vibes player Steve Nelson, saxophonist Eric Person and drummer Billy Kilson.

Holland's is an exemplary bass sound: full, resonant and sonorous but flexible and propulsive enough to power the band through his deft, driving compositions. Typically Holland sets up a vigorous rhythm, courtesy of a lively repeated bass figure embellished by Kilson's smart kit work, and his front line then stretches out over it.

JAZZ

Local boy made cool

To judge by the size and enthusiasm of the first-night crowd that greeted Holland at the scene of his former triumph, the legend "local boy makes good" is still a potent one. Holland has been at the heart of New York jazz since the early 1970s, playing everything from Circle's semi-abstract music with Anthony

Ronnie Scott's

music with M-Base figures

To the elegant, serious poise customarily associated with his European label, ECN, Holland adds an invigorating bounce and snap that is nure New York. The resulting music is cool and considered without being overly cerebral, carefully constructed but loose and informal enough to accommodate the formidable but tastefully restrained soloing skills of both Person and

Such was the quartet's eagerness to stretch out on Holland's up-tempo tunes and Person's tricky closer, The Ringleader — that four pieces entirely filled their 30-minute set. But it was a compact ballad, In Your Arms, that provided the evening's highlight for a highly supportive

Brescia-Bergamo Pianistico: Dozens of pianists descend on the two towns, Evgeny Kissin among them. Claudio Abbado conducts the Chamber Orchestra of Europe with Pavarotti.

April 22-June 16: Festival Pianistico Internazionale di Brescia e Bergamo, c/o Teatro Grande. I-25121 Brescia, Italy (39 30 293022).

Budapest: The Budapest Spring has grown to a month to mark the 1.100th year of the Magyar settlement: classical musicians - mostly Hungarian - plus dance, drama and folk culture. The Budapest Summer falls in June with a flowering of theatre.

Budapest Spring until Apr 14; Budapest Summer June-Aug: Budapest Interart Festivalcenter, PO Box 80, H-1366 Budapest, Hungary (36]

Copenhagen, Cultural Capital of Europe 96: Strong theatre and dance from Stein, Mnouchkine, Suzuki. Lepage. Meredith Monk, Pina Bausch and ballet troupes. Meanwhile, 96 artists create installations in cargo containers at the harbour. An acoustic project fills Copenhagen's plazas and parks with the sounds of other cities. Symphony orchestras in the summer. April for early music, jazz in July. Hamlet: the Rock Ballet will be floating on the moat at

All year: (Danish Tourist Board 0171-259 5958 or Copenhagen 96 on 45_33.779633)

Flanders: A range of music around the region. Early music blossoms most notably in Bruges (July-Aug). Conteniporary composers elsewhere, while Brussels considers the sounds of exile (Sept-Oct). To Dec: Festival van Vlaanderen, Ravensteinstraat 60, B-100r) Bruxelles, Belgium (32.2

Monte Carlo: During the Printemps Des Arts, the Riviera glimmers with star concerts and young soloists. Katia and Marielle Labèque tickle the ivories: James Galway pipes up. Compagnie Antonio Gades arrives with Carmen and Fuente Ovejuna.

April 6-May 12: Printemps des Arts , 8 rue Louis Notari, MC-98000, Monaco (33 93158303).

Schwetzingen: Spring music in the intimate rococo theatre and castle. Concerts with Barhara Moser and more. Scarlatti's Mitridate Eupatore. April 30-June 6: Schwetzinger Festspiele GmbH. Postfach 100040. D-70049 Stuttgart. Germany (49 71) 9293038).

MAY

Bergen: In picturesque Bergen, concerts are held in the homes of Grieg and Ole Bull. erstwhile competitor of Paganini. Other venues: the medieval King's Hall and art nouveau National Theatre. The line-up embraces the Boston Camerata and cellist Truls Mork In drama. Silviu Purcarete is filling in Aeschylus's missing bits with a 120-strong cast.

May 22-June 2: Bergen International Festival. Box 183, N-5001 Bergen. Norway (47.55312170)

Dresden: Rare operas. Dresden dedicates itself to Mozart's Viennese contemporaries. Salieri's Falstaff and Cimarosa's Il matrimonio segreto. Also the premiere of Der Zerbrochene Krug. the last opera Viktor Ullmann penned at Theresienstadt concentration camp. There is also a programme of world-class concerts, some of them given en plein air. May 16-June 2: Dresdner

Musikfestspiele, Postfach 202723, D-01193 Dresden, Germany (49.35).4866317)

Drottningholm: The royal court theatre still has its 18thcentury machinery from moving waves to cloud cars. Operas and ballets are reconstructed with period instruments: Orphee et Euridice, Tom Jones, La serva padrona and Il maestro di musica this year. Anne Sofie von Otter gives recitals in costume. June 1-Sept 14: Drottningholms Slottsteater, Box 27050. S-102 51 Stockholm, Sweden (40.8.605 [400] munching on chocolate chip cookies in his hotel room as the Scotland football squad whiled away the time before the international with Australia at Hampden Park tonight. Finding a sweet taste in his mouth was probably a relief after the Coca-Cola Cup final on Sunday, in which Aston Villa shamed his Leeds United team while beating them 3-0.

The biscuits were being fed to him by Ally McCoist, who will, purely for this evening, relieve him of the Scotland captaincy. The honour marks the occasion of McCoist's fiftieth cap, although McAllister joked that only the bribe of cookies persuaded him to agree to it. Britain take control with late

flurry

THE Great Britain women's hockey team swept to an 8-2 victory over France at Bisham Abbey yesterday as they continued their build-up to the Olympic Games (Alix Ramsay writes). However, despite fielding a stronger side than England put out to beat France 2-0 on Sunday, Britain took a long time to wear down a determined France defence.

The deadlock was broken after 15 minutes when Sixsmith forced the ball home. but Picard equalised five minutes before the break. Atkins put Britain ahead early in the second half only for France to draw level again through Pi-card. As France tired, Britain took control with goals from McDonald (2), Fraser (2), Simpson and Robertson.

who ended 17 months without a tournament win by lifting the Thailand Open ten days ago, was surprisingly beaten 6-4 by Darren Morgan in the first round of the Benson and Hedges Irish Masters at Goffs, Co Kildare, yesterday.

McManus won the first frame, but was never ahead again as Morgan stole the second on the black after trailing 68-11 and accounted for the third with a break of 101. Morgan took the fifth and sixth frames with late runs of 67 and 49 and rounded off his best performance of the season with breaks of 83 and 86.

IOC braced for flood of positive drug tests

DEREK CASEY, the director general of the Sports Council, is optimistic that a highresolution mass-spectrometer drug-testing apparatus, similar to that to be used by the Atlanta laboratory during the centenary Olympic Games this year, should become available to British sport during the next two weeks.
The case of Diane Modahl, who was cleared by the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAAF) on Monday, 21 months after her positive test in Lisbon, Portugal, has made the Sports Council and British Olympic Association anxious that foolproof random testing, equivalent in standard to that in Atlanta, should be utilised before the Games.

Sport faces a financial crisis on drug testing. In Great Britain, many sports other than athletics would have been bankrupted by an incident such as that of Modahl. who is suing the British Athletic Federation (BAF) for £480,000 in costs and dams. Yet the new International Olympic Committee (IOC) testing apparatus, approved for Atlanta at an executive board meeting this month, is as much as ten times more sensitive than the previous

The threat facing all national Olympic committees is that the new system has the potential to reveal dozens, if not hundreds, of positive cases in Atlanta. Subsequent challenges in the courts by competitors could prove financially catastrophic to sport.

Tony Ward, the spokesman for the BAF, said yesterday: "We welcome, as always, any system that catches steroid cheats, but sport has to have an arbitration court in order to avoid punitive legal costs."

The IOC has such a court, but the BAF is contesting with IAAF the costs of the Modahl case, caused by imperfections of procedure at the Lisbon

Casey said yesterday that testing apparatus comparable to Atlanta's is available in Britain within the pharmacological industry. "We need a temporary but dedicated machine for use prior to the Games," he said. "It's not a matter of if, but when. We should have a decision soon."

Professor Arne Ljungqvist. a leading figure on the IAAF and IOC medical commis-sions, confirmed that improved testing will threaten every competitor who takes a risk at the forthcoming Games. There could be a flood of positive tests as the new equipment, he says, is far more sensitive, thanks to increased cell magnification. "We are improving, and can analyse a lower level, and over a longer period [retroactive-ly]," Ljungqvist said.

It may, therefore, already be too late for some competitors taking illegal performanceenhancing drugs to cease in order to be "clean" for the Games during the last two weeks of July. "If competitors don't understand that we have improved, they will have miscalculated," Ljungqvist said.

On the evidence of analysis using the new apparatus last year in weightlifting, steroid testing is now between three and ten times as effective. Ljungqvist says that it will be helpful for the Atlanta organisers to adopt a positive rather than negative response. welcoming the technological breakthrough by promoting

Billy Payne, the president of the Atlanta organising committee, while saying "we favour all measures to create a level playing field", is understandably alarmed at the prospect of the centenary Games being marred by wholesale positive tests.

Juan Antonio Samaranch, the IOC president, thinks that the short-term adverse publicity of multiple positives will, in the long term, be beneficial. After the executive board decision to introduce the testing, he said: "Where the equipment is available, what would the public say if we did not use here is a man named Kieren Perkins who can swim awfully fast. So fast, that he is regarded as a shoo in for the Olympic Games 1,500 metres freestyle. He is world champion and world record-holder at the distance. He is charming, Australian and adored.

He also faces a legal bill of A$100,000 (about £52,000) for suing the sponsor of the Australian swimming team. The company in question is called Telstra; the team has been obligingly, not to say ingratiat-ingly, called Telstra Dolphins.

Not surprisingly, Telstra was keen to exploit its investment, and it did so by using a picture of the team's hottest property. Its choice, inevitably, was the lovely Perkins, iron man of the pool, living national treasure, etc., etc.

Perkins was not happy about this, because nobody asked his permission. So, he sued. Alas, he lost, hence the six-figure legal bill; but it will not ruin him. Perkins has plenty of dollars: he even has his own television

This is simply a tale of modern sporting life. It is absurd. naturally, but it is not really all that exceptional. Perkins is not a monster of greed, just a person at the top of a fiendishly exacting trade ... but let us zip-pan to Judy Grinham. Remember her? She won the Olympic gold medal for the 100 metres backstroke in 1956. She was given the same time as an American - Imin 12.9sec but was awarded the race on a judge's decision. She has never received any official honour, the only British swimmer with an Olympic title to have been

In 1958, she was asked to do an advertisement in which she was to make a cake with margarine in-stead of butter and show how much easier life was with marge. In short, free money. She turned it down. Last week, at an Olympic centenary dinner with other British Olympic swimmers, she gazed with mild bewilderment at the monster that modern sport has become. For such as Perkins, sport is a business and a tough one — a vehicle for vaulting ambition, everlasting fame and

Grinham still says that she never competed for anything except personal enjoyment. Fun. She expected, and expects, no reward. She is not even the remotest bit self-the swimmers themselves. "People don't seem to enjoy things as much," she said. "They seem too serious. Bobby Charlton once said that he didn't mind too much if opponents went past him, because he could then have the pleasure of watching a skilful player score a magnificent goal. You wouldn't hear that today. It's all aggression." Indeed it is An Olympic swimming final is glory for one, despair for seven others. It is no sideshow, set apart from real life; real lives and real destinies depend on a few splashes. The higher the stakes, the greater the despair, the greater the elation, the more compelling the spectacle - and the less fun for competitors.

The concept of fun - perhaps the first motivator for all sport - has reached vanishing point. "I simply don't know if I'd survive these days," Grinham said. "I'm still that 'naive and unsophisticated teenager from Neasden', as someone once described me."

Grinham once protested to the judges on the subject of disqualification. She was not disqualified and she should have been, because she failed to touch the was gently told: "Judy, worry about when we disqualify you when you haven't done anything wrong.

A nice story; but such stories abound in their times, as Perkins stories do today. From here, it is a short to step to a blanket condemnation of modern athletes, modern sport, modern money; to heap bile upon the world's legion of Perkinses who will descend on Atlanta this summer to give their polished press conferences, their best profiles to camera, and to seek everlasting glory, eternal fame, and enough millions to pay as many legal bills as they will face.

Blame the athletes? One might as well blame the weathercock for the wind. Why cannot sport be like it was? Might as well yearn for the Pleistocene era and sigh for the days of the woolly mammoth.

ible; structures and functions, once lost, cannot be regained. So far as modern Olympians are concerned, the lost structure or function is fun. "I can't say that the vast sums of money now are wrong," Grinham said, "it's just different. I never lived Dummy's ten won the trick, and Zeidenberg played a spade to the king and ace. West gave his partner a dia-mond ruff. This was the critical point — it might seem natural for the declarer to play low on this diamond, but Zeidenberg carefully un-blocked the king. Now, a second heart came back, won in dummy. The declarer then ran all the trumps, finishing in hand. This was the ending (see diagram).

As you can see, the thoughtful unblock in diamonds allowed Zeidenberg to cash his diamond winners ending in dummy (via the marked finessel. In the two-card ending, East was unable to keep consecutive races ▼ and more than $5 million, you are entitled to reach for the furthest frontiers. Cigar does just that in the Dubai World Cup today when the champion six-year-old, racing outside the United States for the first time, meets his date with destiny.

Should he win, Cigar will cross the line separating great horses from the sublime. The plaudits have been almost grudging despite Cigar's outstanding sequence, in which he has treated opponents with disdain. This is his chance to drive home the message.

There is an intangible, magical quality about great racehorses. It drips from them like the liquid gold to have made this contest possible. Sheikh Mohammed alluded to it on Monday when fondly reminiscing of Lammarra: "Sometimes, before he went to gallup, he would just stop. He would be still, just looking around. I don't know why. Maybe he was telling the other horses he was the best."

It is as well for the sheikh's four runners that Cigar has not set eyes on them since his arrival. The horse has been quarantined but his daily exer-

Allen Paulson, the horse's excuse if he is beaten." Bill

line, although he ventured of Cigar's appearance yesterday suggested he knows the day is near. He was on his toes, prancing, boasting, delighting the photographers. Let loose, he obeyed his rider's restraint while making plain his readiness for the task. He looked like a coiled spring. These were marvellous, private moments with a thoroughbred in his prime.

Nevertheless, to indulge Cigar in morning tranquil is to lose sight of his objective. He must prove himself on the track, which, in itself, will ask serious questions of him in the opening strides. The dirt surface at Nad Al Sheba, more demanding than he has previously encountered, could sap Cigar dry, particularly if the rains extend to today. The odds are metaphorically against him, even if he is favoured by the bookmakers.

Australia, represented by Danewin, and Japan, by Lively Mount, appear less menacing than Godolphin's fourpronged challenge, fronted by Halling and Tamayaz. The latter, with a pedigree to excel on dirt. is improving fast.

Doubtless Sheikh Mohammed is plotting an ambush in the finest Bedouin tradition. For all his competitive spirit, however, the only satisfactory outcome is for Cigar to transpose his brilliance from home soil to Dubai, which promotes itself as a gateway to the

Norman Conqueror gives Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother a memorable victory in the Royal Artillery Gold Cup at Sandown yesterday

lorman Conqueror earns royal favour

BY RICHARD EVANS, RACING JOURNALIST OF THE YEAR

A CHANGE in the entry rules for the Royal Artillery Gold Cup Steeplehcase enabled the Queen Mother to enjoy the 413th success of her career yesterday - and one of the most exciting.

The conditions were altered to allow Colonels-in-Chief of regiments other than the Royal Artillery to have a runner and racing's most popular owner was on hand to see her silks carried to a four-length success by Major Ollie Ellwood on Norman

However, the 6-4 on favourite looked anything but the winner turning out of the back staight and was struggling in third place, a good 15 lengths behind True Steel. Despite jumping into second place at the Pond Fence, the leader still appeared beyond recall but as he tired and blundered at the final obstacle, Norman Conqueror surged into the lead and powered up the Sandown hill. Norman Conqueror, who won the Grand Military Gold Cup at the Esher horse to have won both races in the same season and a clearly delighted owner braved chill winds to talk to the horse's trainer, Tim Thomson Jones, and his lad, Jimmy McLelland, before

The winner is entered in the trish National, a race in which the Oueen Mother has never had a runner, but he is unlikely to be take part. Thomson Jones said: "He's a quirky horse and if he's not up with the pace he switches himself off, which is what happened today. The jockey gave him an unbelievable ride from the water jump to get him back into the race.

"The Queen Mother was absolutely delighted. It is rather nice in the first year she was allowed to have a runner to have a horse that was eligible and good enough for the race."

Earlier in the day Mick Fitzgerald found himself "jocked off" Rough Ouest, the favourite for the Grand National on Saturday, but he was not complaining. The jockey had been due to ride out the Cheltenham Gold Cup runner-up for his trainer, Terry Casey, yesterday. "Terry wanted to ride the horse himself because he knows him very well and I agree with him. No-one is better than Terry at telling you how the horse is and I spoke to him afterwards and he was absolutely chuffed to bits with him." Fitzgerald has ridden in the Grand National only once before and fell at the first fence. Although Rough Quest is a form "certainty". judged on his Cheltenham performance, the affable Irishman is well aware the defeats of horses with similar or better credentials - such as Master Oats, Garrison Savannah and Cool Ground — underpins the special test posed by Aintree.

"The National is still unique. It is not just an ordinary race and I don't care what anyone else says about the effect of modifying the fences. If Rough Quest gets round he's got a great chance. He'll get the trip — the biggest problem is the 30 fences."

Leading athletes will reap benefits of new circuit to rival World Cup

Old order fights triathlon revolution

S imon Lessing and Spen-cer Smith, his predeces-sor as uncellable. sor as world champion, are among a group of leading triathletes who have signed for a new world circuit that will rival the International Triathlon Union (ITU) World Cup. It could make Lessing the sport's first millionaire with Smith, his fellow Briton, not far behind. The International Triathlon

Grand Prix will involve 25 of the world's best men in a tenrace series for a first prize understood to be $25,000 (about £16.500) at each event. Second place would earn $20,000, with $15,000 for third. Hitherto, World Cup prize-money has been loose change by comparison, although the fund this year has been substantially increased.

The grand prix is expected to run from July to December and appearance money has also been promised. Brad Beven, the World Cup winner for the past three years, Mike Pigg, Mark Allen and Greg means that the grand prix has scooped the world's top six. Lessing, who holds both ITU world titles, long and

The grand prix is being launched by The World Series Triathlon Corporation, a Sydney-based organisation. According to Andrew Fraser, its public relations manager, "positive discussions" have been taking place with the ITU with a view to the grand prix receiving world governing body approval. The ITU disagrees. Les McDonald, the ITU president, said: "There are no discussions with us at all. We see this as a rather noxious development." McDonald said that he had sent the following advisory to his board members: "There is no agreement, or understanding. or communication, with [between ITU and On Line fnow Triathlon Corporation]. go with the grand prix jeopardising their participation in the Olympics. McDonald is adamant that ITU events will be the qualification route, but it would make a mockery of the sport's Olympic debut if the big names were excluded.

These athletes should be forewarned that, if they are going to be part of a rebel series which is competing with their own national federa-tions, and the international federation, and if they do not compete in the ITU events, they will not find themselves going to the Olympics," Mc-Donald said. The ITU could, however, issue wild cards as for the world championships.

One attempt at bringing the athletes into line has failed almost before it started. The ITU has revoked the World Cup and world championships ban that it introduced only last November on athletes who compete in events portraying themselves as world championships, notably McDonald denied that the move was a response to the threat of legal action. The grand prix is especially of the sport. The profile of triathlon will go through the roof when people see what we are doing.

The Fifties: Candide. Radio 3, 7.30pm.

Not with a whimper but with a resounding bung, Radio 3's season reflecting well night every phase of life in the 1950s ends tonight. This is a concert version of Leonard Bernstein's 1956 stage musical is a concert version of Leonard Bernstein's 1956 stage musical Candide. As all the world should know by now, Voltaire's satirical novel is about a hopeless optimist (Karl Daymond) and his search for the girl (Rebecca Caine) who has been seized as war booty. It must be the only musical in history that is fuelled by the philosophy—dispensed tonight by Ron Moody's Pangloss—that "all is for the best in the best of possible worlds". What is more, it even has a hit song that transpare his Leibnitzian doctrine that trumpets his Leibnitzian doctrine.

The Afternoon Shift. Radio 4, 3.00pm.

Cinema history describes instances galore of actors who, having scored a success in one role, were not allowed subsequently to shake off the image. Think of the early years of Errol Flynn, swashbuckler sans pareil. Think of the virginal wholesomeness of Doris Day. Think also of Christopher Lee. In Exorcising Ghosts, the first of four Afternoon Shift features about showbusiness and sports. personalities who did their honest best to free themselves of typecasting. Lee recounts how he spent 14 years playing Dracula and other monsters from both sides of the grave. What he calls his "graveyard period" stopped him from winning the roles that he most coveted.

Lethargy, laughter and lightning, all right? current goings-on, you scan the horizon for the next event, and Aunity in an evening's television. I was naturally then monitor its slow but inevitable advance, sometimes consulting your watch. After two weeks - chuffed to bits when last night culminated in ITV's unmissable Savage Skies. It concerned ternados in America, you see: people stood and watched helpless while churning clouds advanced towards them, a dark umbilical cord sucking and destroying, its vortex whipping with winds of 200 miles an hour. As one tornado revisted through a geranium greenhouse in Wichita, the funnel of mad air turned visibly pink. So what is the symbolic link with such proerammes as And the Beat Goes On? Well. you can see it coming, that's what. And the Beat Goes On (Channel 4) has been unluckily named, I feel. The title suggests tedium. But the most unfortunate thing about this peculiarly lifeless period Brookside is the complete lack of action and surprise. Bored by the

which we should remember equals two hours of a viewer's life for ever lost - no scene has actually required dialogue to put it across. Rendered silently or in Portuguese, the action would be equally comprehensible. Christine raven-haired middle-class English student - has at last discovered that Lawrentian lover Jack is not truly working-class, but only putting on an act for purposes of romantic advancement. Gosh, is this really true? Well, I'll go to the foot of our stairs.

After last week's review, in which I stated with unfounded confidence that the street of terraced houses was a set borrowed from Dennis Potter's Lipstick on Your Collar, a spokesman from Mersey TV phoned up to object:

much care had been taken. The same sort of care has been taken, I suppose, to remind us of authentic 1900 phraseology — "Are you all right?" "No, he's half left" — but it doesn't add up to much. The real tragedy is that And the Beat has none of the vitality, the sheer style of real 1960s film-making. Our forgettable hero. Ritchie, is a pudding on legs who occasionally scowls at the poor hand life has dealt him, and reminds us of bodily functions such as masturbation. Jenny Agutter is the best thing in it, and all credit to her. She is hoeing a lonely row.

ymptomatic of the malaise of And the Beat is that whenever attention turns to Mr Spencer's factory, there is no work going on. People gossip in pairs, or lean over banisters, as though about to burst into song. There is no noise of production, although

Mr Spencer (Stephen Moore) looks quite satisfied when he watches the shopfloor from his office window. Full employment probably has something to do with this. We must blame Supermac. How different is the leisure centre in The Brittas Empire (BBC1). And how unfair of the Almighty that the writers of Britias can have eight distinct zingy ideas for a single half-hour a borrowed one with weak classic, and stretches it over eight hours. so thinly that you can see through it to the tubes in the telly. Farce requires endless invention, and in The Brittas Empire, yes, you can see things coming, but that's the point: they know you can. Each plot line last night — a Casanova doppelganger for Mr Brittas; a misconceived marketing drive; Colin's herbal medicine; the deputation from the Church of Chananooga: a bear loose in the carpark was obviously leading somewhere, but it was impossible to predict exactly where. The Brittas Empire is on top form. Each week it hits the ground running. Harriet Thorpe as ditsy receptionist Carole is an utter joy, and Chris Barrie was right to stick with Gordon Brittas - a man who presents alibis such as "I was at home emptying my turn-ups". "Hold on, didn't I ban you for taking too long to get changed?" he snapped at a feeble old age pensioner who had come to the leisure centre hoping for a swim. "Out. out," he commanded (a sympathetic "Aw" from the audience), and should her back outside.

Back with Savage Skies, we had lightning as well as tornados – next week, hurricanes! Oh yes, in the search for energy on the box, one need look no further than this. Sometimes I spare a thought for Ian Holm, however, as he solemnly tolls the mortality statistics in that wonderful - well, tolling manner of his. "In just 45 minutes, it caused 30 million dollars worth of damage Forget those ten-year-olds in America who have seen a zillion murders by the age of ten. Think how many people's deaths Ian Holm must have recounted in his

Last night's Savage Skies was like Gaul, in three parts, First lightning, then people running away from tornados, and then (curiously) people running towards them. Some of these storm chasers had legitimate business for driving their little cars towards thunderheads; others less so. They all looked mad to me. One photographer who took pictures of lightning spent night after night capturing light-streaks on celluloid, and yelling with every flash in the sky "All right! Awill right!" Occasionally he exclaimed "Woo!" but then he resumed "All RIGHT! Awwilli right!" I would not want to be this man, but I envy him one thing: he knows exactly what his last utterance on earth will be. Night after night, he sees it coming. And on his gravestone they will carve the words "He said it was all right".

Hearts of Gold BBC1, 8.00pm

The content, as always, is fine and admirable. Ordinary people who have displayed extraordinary courage deserve to be feted on television. The reservation is whether this schmaltzy showbusiness format is the right way to do it. Kicking off the new series are Alan Sharpe and John Piff, the British lorry drivers who risked their own lives to rescue three people from a blazing petrol station in Belgium. Their bravery was iruly heroic, but they are modest men and clearly upset by the fuss. Suddenly confronting them with the three survivors releases emotions that might better be Thankfully less mawkish are salutes to a woman who raises funds for a littlenublicised disease and an off-duty nurse who saved a young road accident victim.

Travelog

Channel 4, 8_30pm Pere McCarthy rounds off the current series by visiting Laos. If he is less jocular than usual, one of the poorest countries in the world is not the best venue to make jokes about. Nor is it tasteful to be flippant about a nation on which the United States dropped more bombs during the Vietnam conflict than it dropped in the whole of the Second World War. McCarthy does not even try. On the contrary, he says it is hard not to feel ashamed. But this is no party political broadcast. McCarthy has done his homework on Laotian history and unravels an intriguing cultural mix of French colonialism, Buddhism, Marxism and Pepsi-Cola. His nightmare is that a traditional and unsullied society will go the same tasteless way as neighbouring Thailand.

Modern Times: Beautiful Men BBC2, 9,00pm

The Miss World contest may have been politically incorrect but at the peak of its popularity 27 million people watched it. But first the BBC, and then ITV, decided the show was degrading to women. The Miss World organisers, Eric and Julia Morley, were undaunted. Last year they started beauty contest for men. Helena Appin's skittish film follows some of the lads hoping to become Mr UK and, perhaps, Mr World. The heats take place in nightclubs before audiences of screaming girls. Asked about his hobbies, Darnon, a 24-year-old builder replies: "Drinking, mainly." Miss World veterans, such as compere Judith Chalmers and judge Michael Winner, are invited to describe the man of the 1990s. They struggle. One Miss World married Bruce Forsyth. Phil, voted Mr Essex, and Andy, alias Mr Coventry, must hope for other spin-offs.

A Man's World: The Father BBC2, 9.50pm

in the first half of the 20th century the man's role was to go out to work leaving his wife to bring up the children. Fathers who changed napples or pushed prams would be accused of being hen-pecked and of surrendering some of their manliness. That, at least, was the norm but it was often challenged. As well as other moments of tenderness, a Welshman remembers singing his small daughter to sleep with, of all things, The Red Flag. After the war, as one of those splendidly stilted Ministry of Information films shows, the Government actually promoted the idea of fatherhood classes. When children starting growing up, it was the father's job to prepare them for the harsh world outside. Working-class children were taught to be streetwise, while middle-class fathers sent their sons to boarding schools to toughen them up. Peter Waymark

POOTBALL CORRESPONDENT

IF EVER pride could stir the deeds of a sportsman, it should inspire Les Ferdinand at Wembley Stadium tonight. Having begun the week in the embrace of Pelé, receiving the vote of his fellow professionals as England's footballer of the year, Ferdinand then hit a period of quiet desperation, wondering if the clamour for Robbie Fowler, the irresistible apprentice, would deny him his place in the national side.

It has not. Fowler, 20, is a substitute, Alan Shearer is out with a niggling groin strain, and so, in the words of Terry Venables, the England coach, Ferdinand has been given his chance "to be the main threat" to a Bulgaria side that he rates as the most potent attacking force in the forthcoming European championship. There are four changes from

ber. Tony Adams, the captain then, is injured, so his armband will be worn by Stuart Pearce, at 33 proving that perseverance is sometimes all on the sporting front. in place of Adams. Gareth Southgate, having been converted from midfield to centre back by Aston Villa, proves that Venables is looking for versatility and intelligence, in his ranks. In the midfield. ioining Paul Gascoigne as the fulcrum of the team, Paul Ince has his first chance in a year to persuade Venables that he has learnt discipline, both in the personal sense and in terms of holding his position, as the side's anchor. Ince, of Internazionale, is getting to grips with Italian football, despite being sent off against Udinese last Sunday. With Gascoigne told publicly by Venables that it is time that he paced his began using himself to best effect for the team, and Ince instructed to be responsible in harness with him, the wings, that have troubled England for so long, are entrusted to Steve Stone, on the right, and

Steve McManaman. Some maintain that McManaman is at his best for Liverpool in a free role. Both the player and the coach were at pains yesterday to explain that McManaman will start wide on the left, with scope to come infield, to operate effectively in an old-fashioned inside left position. "He's got that licence," Venables said. "If he finds he's getting joy wide out on the left, he should stay there to give the team width, but really I'm asking nothing different to the way he's played recently for Liverpool."

Stone, though he privately hankers for a role infield as well, will do as he has previously done for England to spectacular effect, patrol up and down the right with bulldog tenacity. There may be limitations to Stone's technique, but none at all in terms of his heart and commitment, and, though Venables stresses that the game tonight is preparation for Euro 96, rather than all-important in itself, one can teel around the England camp at Bisham Abbey a rising expectation, a tightening of the competitive morale. The tournament is 11 weeks away, during which time England have just five matches to prepare, and every game where a man is given the shirt

"It's important for everyone," Ince said yesterday, important for English football as a whole because of what is coming in the summer. It is a chance against illustrious opposition. Provided that Bulgaria, the World Cup semi-finalists, are motivated tonight, they will bring tech-nique in the extreme, and sharp, rapacious counter-at-

Ferdinand has the task of trying to upstage them. When Professional Footballers' Association in London on Sunday night, when he hugged Pelé, the greatest player in the game's history, one could see self-esteem rise within him. He has such physical power, the potency that Venables talks about, but also a tendency to under-perform, to become almost shy and introverted and not to utilise his talents fully. Newcastle United have begun to change that, to instil confidence. In place of Shearer, whose past 18 months and ten games without a goal for England must invite a challenge from someone, Ferdinand has become the right man at the right time, but, even now, he will look over his shoulder, if he is not scoring, and see

WHEN he left Lord's yesterday, M. J. K. Smith, the man who would be chairman of England's cricket selectors had not Raymond Illingworth beaten him to the post two years ago, let down his car window to allow a lone pho-tographer to take his picture.

It appeared a vainglorious act, but Smith, who had just come out of a meeting of the Test and County Cricket Board (TCCB) to decide how the England team should be managed, after another winter of woe, had reason to feel satisfied with his afternoon's

Smith may have lost his aggressive battle to remove Illingworth as chairman of selectors, but he and Warwickshire, his county, who are in the vanguard of calls for progressive leadership, could yet win the war.

It was decided at Lord's that Illingworth and his selection panel will work until September, when they will choose the winter touring parties, and then be replaced by a new management team, whose structure will be determined by a working party being set up by David Acfield. This is what the progressives wanted. One of the selectors will be a new appointee, a coach to the England team who effectively succeeds to the position of manager which Illingworth resigned at the weekend, as revealed by The Times yesterday. The favourites for the position are David Lloyd, of Lancashire, and John Emburey, who recently signed a four-year contract to coach Northamptonshire.

The problem for any candidate is that he may be wanted by England for the next six months, but not necessarily thereafter, and to take this chance he might have to forfeit a lucrative county career. This is one of the problems facing the TCCB's ten-man executive committee, chaired by Dennis Silk, which discussed a range of potential candidates yesterday and will be talking to some of them shortly. Time is of the essence, as the TCCB would like selectors in place to choose players for the England A v The Rest fixture at Chelmsford starting on April 20. England's next

international against India, at the Oval on May 23.

The chosen coach will have 12 matches to make his mark with England - three one-day internationals and three Test matches against both India and Pakistan.

Lloyd remains the clear favourite. Most important, he has the support of Michael Atherton, the England captain since 1993, with whom he has worked well at Lancashire. Nor does he have a contract as restrictive as Emburey's. Lloyd made the usual noises yesterday of a man being 🦈 touted for a big promotion, and certainly did not rule himself out. The addition of a coach means that the selection panel will now comprise five members: the chairman (Illingworth), the coach, the captain

MARK FOSTER, one of the Great Britain swimming team's best hopes for a gold medal at the Olympic Games this summer, broke the world 50 metres butterfly longcourse record and picked up a £10.000 bonus at the Empire pool in Cardiff last night.

Foster, 25. who will swim the 50 metres freestyle in Atlanta, added the long-course butterfly best to his world short-course mark of 23.45sec.

With James Hickman and Jamie Salter, his Olympic team-mates, to urge him on, Foster, who is based in the Cardiff. lowered the world record for one length from 24.27sec to 24.07sec. "I am very pleased: I seemed to be over-revving a bit, but I had a lot of confidence," Foster said. "I felt better tonight than I did at the Olympic trials at the weekend, and I just wish I had been going for the world record in the 50-metre freestyle.

"This will give me a lot of confidence for the Olympics and I will definitely be going for gold in the 50 freestyle." Foster's sponsors had put together a cash and car incentive package worth £10,000 for one of a minority of clubs without a nickname.

Highfield, the sport's perennial losers, reinvented themselves as the Prescot Panthers this week. The trend in the lower divisions has also been taken up by Huddersfield, Salford. Batley. Chorley, Doncaster. Hunslet. Swinton, Leigh and Barrow - the Giants, Reds, Bulldogs, Chieftains, Dragons, Hawks, Lions, Centurions and Braves, respectively.

Keighley pioneered the American way with adoption of the Cougars' emblem five years ago. Crowds there have increased ten-fold. Clubs that ing ploy are now scrambling for exclusive use of a variety of animals and demonised creatures. All these were rejected by Halifax in settling on Blue Sox, the most radical of the new identities.

The anguished question of club mergers was one of the reasons. Nigel Wood, the Halifax chief executive, said: "Too few spectators are still being sought by too many Super League clubs. It doesn't take a wise man from China to work out four in West Yorkshire is an over-representation. To compete effectively and stand alone we had to do something positive to broaden our appeal.

We could have gone for a macho and aggressive name, but the game itself is strong and hard enough without reinforcing traditional images and preconceptions."

To accommodate the new Blue Sox supporters that it hopes to attract, the club also announced a £5 million ground redevelopment. On match days, rugby league will be part of an overall entertainment package. Supporters carrying baseball bats, however, can expect to have them confiscated.
